THE SANDMAN STORY

Casper's Dream. CASPER kept a tavern on a country road. Few travelers passed that way, but he managed to make enough to keep himself and his wife, Lisbeth. Casper did not believe in doing anything for which he did not get well paid, and one night when the rain was beating on the roof, and the wind howled at the door, he went to the door and looked it earlier than usual, saying: "Anyone who is out in this storm would not be able to pay for a lodging, and I do not want him here."

DOMESTIC SCIENCE

BY LILIAN TINGLE. Making grape jelly is often convenient to "draw" the juice, drain, heat and can it as if making it for a beverage, only of course, for the latter purpose ripe grapes would be chosen. The grape juice, after standing in bottle, frequently deposits dark tartar crystals. The juice can be drained from these and made into jelly at any convenient time during the winter, and the jelly is then not likely to have the tartar crystals which trouble some grape jelly-makers. Grape Jelly—Use acid or under-ripe grapes. Remove the stems, wash and drain the grapes. Place in a preserving kettle and crush with a wooden masher. Stir to prevent burning. Cook until the seeds separate. Less care is necessary if the juice is drawn in a freeseless cooker, or in a fireproof jar in the oven, or in a large, double boiler. Strain the juice through a jelly bag, but do not press it. The pulp left in the bag may be later rubbed through a sieve and used to make grape marmalade, conserves, "spiced grapes," catsup or fruit paste confections. Measure the clear juice and measure an equal quantity of sugar. It is really safer to weigh than to measure. Heat the sugar in a shallow pan in the oven, leaving the door open, and stirring constantly. Add the grape juice a quart 20 minutes, then add the heated sugar and boil three to five minutes, when the jelly should be set for use. Place in hot sterilized jelly glasses and cover with paraffine when cold. The addition of one tablespoon lemon juice to one pint grape juice often improves the flavor of Concord grapes. One-half cup apple juice to one pint grape juice is liked by many housekeepers, but if this jelly is offered for sale or exhibit it should be labeled as "grape and apple jelly." I hope you will have no difficulty with your jelly this year.

Three Breweries Ply Trade in Dry Vancouver.

Report, However, Is That Many Are Depending on Non-Alcoholic Beverages for Thirst Quenching.

VANCOUVER, Wash., Aug. 6.—(Special.)—Though Vancouver is officially "dry" and will become a little more so after January 1, it is apparent that the thirst for beer has not been quenched by the passage of the law.

Three oases now furnish beer to the thirsty where but one had been doing it until recently. A Portland brewery just discovered it would be legal to establish a beer depot here, and this was done in an old saloon building which the brewery held under lease. A stock of beer was put in and automobile delivery established.

In a few days another brewery of Portland followed this example. The local brewery continues to serve its patrons with automobile delivery, so that beer is not scarce in the city, and it is rumored there may be another.

It is asserted, however, that there is not a "dry" depot for all and that many now are quenching their thirst with non-alcoholic beverages.
