DOMESTIC SCIENCE

BY LILIAN TINGLE.

I AM glad you find this column helpful. The flavoring materials used in cooking crawfish are largely a matter of personal taste and convenience. One chef, in this city, who is famous for his crawfish, told me that he used 22 different ingredients for his particular "brew." I can't tell you all of them and if I did the chances are that you either could not procure them all or that you would decide "not to bother with anything so elaborate."

Following is a recipe which I learned joining country to choose the hand of one. This Prince was young, rich and handsome and would select his bride after he saw both girls, so the court was in a great state of excitement.

Ada was very happy at home, where she had plenty of pets, so while Olga was waiting her sister came to receive the Prince. Ada strolled away to the woods with her dog following at her feet. On her way back she stopped a while in her favorite seat in the hollow of an old tree, for she knew that her friend, the Goblin of the Ferns, would expect a visit. In a moment the tiny fellow popped up beside her.

"What's this I hear about a Prince coming to court?" said the Goblin with a tinkling laugh.

"It's true," replied Ada. "The Prince of Norway is to be here tomorrow to choose a bride. I am very happy, as I believe Olga is hoping to be the one selected, so there is no reason for me to worry at all about the matter."

"I don't know about that," returned the Goblin. "Olga is a selfish girl, and she will never be chosen. All the people love you and would like to see you reign after your father dies. So if you wish, you should like the Prince, to marry him."

"But I know there is no chance for me," replied Ada. "Olga has set her mind on getting the Prince and is dressing in that hope now—what could I do?"

"Well, I can help you a great deal," laughed the Goblin. "All of us dislike Olga, for she insists that when she is Queen she will destroy the forests in which we live, and that she will drive us from all colors and sparkle brightly in the sun. At the bottom they had been sewed to a bit of gold cloth, so that they could be used to wear about the neck."

"This is a magic ruffie," continued the Goblin. "Put it on tomorrow when the Prince comes and all will go well with you."

"So Ada took the present home and placed it on her dressing table. The next day the Prince arrived and he seemed to be attracted to Ada. It was a case of love at first sight on both sides, for the girl happened to like him equally well. This of course, made Olga furious and she vowed she would seek revenge on her sister.

Ada had worn the magic ruffie, which with its sparkling play of colors attracted much attention, and this again made the older sister jealous. So when Ada was asleep that night she crept into her room and went to the table. Here she saw the ruffie lying on a velvet cushion and shining in the moonlight. But she did not notice the tiny figure of the Goblin which was swaying on a branch of a tree just outside of the window. Olga picked up the ruffie and put it around her neck as she stood admiring herself in the mirror.

"I shall keep this," she said. "I think it is the thing which takes the Prince's eye and makes him like Ada. She is such a quiet little thing if there were not some reason like this."

Now the Goblin heard every word that Olga said, and she turned to go to the window and alighted on the table. In his hand was an odd-shaped bottle all carved in strange designs.

"You are jealous of your sister and trying to play some mean trick on her," he said, shaking his tiny fist in anger. "But you will get your punishment right now. You think of nothing but fine clothes, and are stealing Ada's pretty feathers now. Well, I will make you a bird and one with ruffles for life."

The Goblin opened the bottle and three drops of the liquid on Olga. In a moment she was inclosed in a white mist that rolled about her, changing to gold and pink, then floated away. And there on the floor, instead of the handsome Princess, was a wild bird, and about its neck was a high ruffie of feathers.

A New Viewpoint of Europe.

A GROUP of tourists in the Yosemite were discussing the war. Most of them were seeing their own country, since they could not see Europe; many frankly admitted that their travels had been a revelation to them of the wealth and beauty of the scenery America has to offer.

"Not only have I come to admire my own country in a way I never dreamed of doing," said one woman, "but since the war I have an entirely different feeling towards Europe. I do not know other people as I do, but I have lost respect for it. Heretofore I have felt a certain reverence for Europe. Its antiquity, its picturesque towns, its art, its quaint customs, all made a special appeal to me. I wanted to go every Summer and revel in these things. But now, since the war is on, Europe strikes me as not having grown up, as being so immature in its outlook on life, that it makes one lose interest in it. Somehow or other, I seem to be acorns removed from the present in its thinking and civilization. In going over there, one seems to be stepping back to a medieval time, to a time when Europe has lost all interest. Up-to-date ideas of humanity and of living seem so much more worth while than when one can get in touch with the latest word in civilization and with people who are right up to the minute in their efforts to be prosperous and happy to get back to antediluvian times seems foolish."

"I always thought we overestimated Europe as a Summer resort," agreed one of the men. "But I never could get any of my women folks to see it before."

"We all bowed down to it," admitted the first speaker. "But I think the war is working a cure. Even those who have not lost respect for it will not feel the pleasure in traveling where they once did. It will be so shattered and such a land of sorrow for so long."

"And in addition," spoke up one of the women, "we are finding what wonders there are in our own country, and in what comfort both of hotel and train service one can see them. I climbed to one of the highest points in this valley when I was a child, and saw a chain of snow-covered mountains with peak after peak rising in it that equaled anything in Switzerland. I have seen the high Sierras do not need to take a back seat."

"Mount Rainier, near Seattle, is higher than Mount Blanc and I am told that its glacier system has a greater area than that of the whole Swiss Alps. I wonder how many Americans realize this," said another of the group. "Anyone who wants mountain climbing can get the genuine article there."

"And where can you find a waterfall equal to the Yosemite Falls? It is the

Thin Folks Who Would Increase Weight

SIMPLE DIRECTIONS EASY TO FOLLOW.

Thin men and women—that big hearty, filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks in the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

If every way you've tried to put on weight has failed try these simple directions. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating now and eat with every one of them a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note your weight. Sargol does not of itself make fat but mixing with your food its purpose is to help the digestive organs turn the fats, sugars and starches of what you have eaten, into rich, ripe fat producing nourishment for the tissues and blood—prepare it in an easily assimilable form which the blood can readily accept. A great deal of this nourishment now passes from thin people's bodies as waste. Sargol is destined to stop the waste and make the fat producing contents of the very same meals you are eating now develop into pounds and points of healthy flesh between your skin and bones. Sargol is non-injurious, pleasant, efficient and non-expensive. Leading druggists are authorized to sell it in large boxes—30 tablets to a package—on a guarantee of weight increase or money back.—Adv.

THE SANDMAN STORY

By MRS. F. A. WALKER.

How the Grouse Got Its Ruffie.

ONCE upon a time there lived in Russia a King who was very old and had two daughters. The King was a widower, and as his health was poor, he was anxious that one of his girls should marry at once, and promised that the one who did should inherit the kingdom. The elder girl, Olga, was a handsome girl, but of a selfish, cruel nature, while the younger, Ada, was kind, gentle and unselfish. Both were fine looking, but Olga's face was hard and showed her nature, while Ada's countenance also plainly indicated her noble heart.

On the 15th birthday of Olga the old King told both his daughters that a young Prince was coming from an ad-highest in the world. And when you stand at the foot of the upper fall and see that straight leap, 1400 feet, down that sheer rock wall of that great chasm, the rushing mass of snow foam, and the rainbows at the bottom filling the air with green and gold and violet glory, you know you would have to hunt through Europe a long while to find anything to equal it for sheer beauty or overpowering magnificence," said another woman.

"Then there is the Grand Canyon, that chasm of color, 200 miles and more in length," broke in another of the group. "From the top, you look down on mountains higher than Mount Washington."

"And where will you find another Yellowstone?" spoke up the first speaker. "With its exquisite colored pools, its swirling geysers, its gaily-colored terraces, its jewel of a canyon with its snowy waterfall, its jade-green river, its walls of rose and amethyst and orange. As I said, U. S. A. can satisfy me for a good many years to come. There is Alaska, lovely as Norway and the desert country with a beauty nobody dreams of until they see it, and the Great Lakes with their wonderful scenery. Maybe when Europe catches up with civilization once more we'll go over just to see what it is making of itself. But do not believe it will ever equal the hold on Americans it has had."
