ARMY RESERVE IS FIRST AM IN CAMPS

Shorter Term of Service Is Urged to Train Civilians Without Long Enlistment.

PUBLIC FAVOR IS SOUGHT

Unit, as Planned, Includes Men Refined From Army and Others Proficient in Military Study.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Aug. 23.—In one sense the prime object of the instruction camps being conducted by Regular Army officers at Plattsburg, N. Y., American Lake, Wash., and San Francisco is to afford rudimentary military training to civilians who are desirous of learning something practical about soldiering, but way down deep the first object of these camps is to arouse interest in an Army reserve and to create a widespread public sentiment favorable to the plan of raising a reserve corps which can be called upon, in time of war, to supplement the regular forces and the state militia.

Time for Training Recommended.

General Wood recognizes as do other Army men, that 30 days is not sufficient time to turn out a soldier, and he is aware that men who devote 30 days at Plattsburg or at American Lake, if they have had no previous military experience, are not equipped for active service.

But men who will apply themselves for 30 days each summer for several years can be taught more than the rudiments of soldiering, and in this way many recruits for an Army reserve can be secured.

General Wood expects to develop a live sentiment in favor of a legally authorized Army reserve and also expects that Chamberlain, in the Army and other influential bodies, having observed the work at these camps, to go on record in support of the reserve idea. It is public sentiment he is developing now more than anything else, for he believes that once public sentiment crystallizes Congress will feel the pressure and will be more disposed than ever before to consider seriously the creation of an Army reserve.

Army Men to be Included.

A Congressionally authorized Army reserve would be made up of others besides men trained at the Summer camps. It would include officers and more especially enlisted men who retire from the regular service; it would include men who have had military training in the National Guard and in the army of other countries.

But one of the most important sources would be the Regular Army, and from that source the bulk of the reserve would be recruited.

Wood's opinion, if Congress would shorten the term of enlistment in the Regular Army, so as to invite into the service a larger number of men who are willing to give a year or two to perfecting themselves in the military art, provided they can be at liberty to take up other work after they have become trained soldiers.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—The Victoria cross has been conferred upon Lieutenant Frederick William Campbell, of the First Canadian Battalion, for conspicuous bravery on June 15 at Givenchy, when he took two machine guns over a parapet, arrived at the German first line with one gun and maintained his position there under the heaviest fire of rifle, machine-gun and bomb fire when almost the whole of his detachment had been killed or wounded. The British supply of bombs being exhausted, Lieutenant Campbell advanced the machine gun still further to an exposed position and, by firing 14,000 rounds, succeeded in holding back the German counter-attacks. Lieutenant Campbell subsequently was wounded and since died.
