Their play was sensational in almost every match, both men playing through, meeting Oregon's best men and seldom giving the local players

Johnston, at 17, was a wonder. His play here was even better and further advanced than that of Charles E. Foley, also of San Francisco, who annexed the singles little the year before, or Mel Long, who had been sent north by the California contingent to represent them here.

This was in 1912, Foley having procured the title the year before from Nat Emerson, who came down from North Yakima, Wash, to defend his little gained in 1910. Foley beat him after a hard match. Foley did not return north the following year to defend.

return north the following year to defend.

Brandt Wickersham, who long has been one of Portland's best, met and was defeated by Johnston, and another Portland man, who met the present champion, was Walter A. Goss, former Northwest champion. He, too, found that Johnston was of National caliber. His appearance, however, was againstany such prediction. He was short, thin, and, to all appearances, had not the endurance which would be necessary in a National event, but his work here disproved all appearances. Being born and reared on asphalt and cement courts, Johnston was clearly "at home," on the Multnomah courts, where he drew the largest galleries ever seen here to watch his cleverness and generalship.

Higg Fine for Eight Innings.

Irve Higginbotham pitched runless ball in the afternoon until he faced the task for the ninth. Then he fell to the extent of three hits, and when Ward miscued and juggled the ball on what should have been an easy out Oakland sent two runners around the bases.

bases.

Prough, who started but didn't finish, was hammered around the lot most liberally, but errors that were untimely for the Oaks helped Portland to pile up a tally that gave them a safe lead. It was Portland's victory from the second inning, when they put two runs across, and they increased that as the contest want along. contest went along.

Oaks Rally Thrilling.

The ninth-inning rally in the morn-ing was a thriller. The Portlanders had apparently cinched the game by banging Klawitter for two runs after banging Klawitter for two runs after the game had been sewed up, and the Oaks came right back in their half for three runs and victory.

Rube Gardner was the hero, He hatted for Tobin with the bases full in the ninth and delivered a single to score two runs. Rowdy Elliott followed with a short fly to center that brought in Johnston from third to break it up. Tanner, the new shortsop, led off with a single, and when Middleton singled to left Krause retired. Kahler came on to walk Johnston. Ness popped out weakly, and then Rube and Rowdy got busy. Kahler was in the game the shortest of the trio of Beaver pitchers, but he is charged with the defeat. Score:
