DOMESTIC SCIENCE BY LILIAN TINGLE.

THERWOOD, Or., Sept. 7.—Dear Miss Tin-: Please tell me through either The Sun-y Oregonian or The Daily Oregonian how make candled citron. M. L. WONDER whether you mean "citron meion" or the true citron, from which the commercial candied citron is made. I give a domestic recipe for EASTERN GIRL WHO IS BEING ENTERTAINED HERE.

Indiana, House Guest of R.E. Morrell.

Candied Citron Melon—To five pounds of citron melon allow 3½ pounds sugar. If lemon flavor is wanted, allow the juice of four to eight lemons with the yellow rinds of three. If sugar flavor is wanted, use one lemon and 2½ ounces ginger root. A nice flavor is given by using six or eight lemons and two ounces of ginger root. The candied meion alone would be rather "flat" and insipidly sweet. I think, though, some people might prefer it.

Prepare the citron as for preserves. Peel and slice it rather thickly, or cut into fancy shapes; boil in water to cover, to which one teaspoon alum has been added. Cook until clear and tender, then drain and wash in cold water.

The doctor said no more, but as he went away he thought how dreadful it would be if Clarence should ever happen to be carried away to Candyland. He was a man who had had long experience, and knew of strange things taking place. People even said he knew whether this is true or not. At any rate, Clarence was very much new president.

Mrs. Isaac Lee Patterson, regent of the Oregon State Daughters of the American Revolution, is in California where she has been enjoying the Gen-d eral Conference of the National organization. She writes interestingly of the great gathering. The reception last Monday in the Grand Canyon building was a delightful affair. The music by the band from the Guatemala building and the elaborate decorations claimed on Tuesday of Tuesday of the Sand Canyon claimed out to explore. The sand heavy, and mother had in her china jar.

Down below the gingerbread trees was a wide field of buns. Very pretty they looked, shining golden in the sun and dotted with raisins, swaying on slender stalks. Clarence thought this looked very attractive, so he started out to explore.

Clarence in Candyland.

CLARENCE was getting thin. His cheeks, which used to be a ruddy pink, were growing pale, and his whole manner was listless. The fact was that Clarence was eating too much candy. It was all in vain that his mother talked or punished. Just as soon as he was out of sight of home, away he would run to the little store at the corner, and stuff himself with every kind of colored sweet.

"Candy after your meals will not harm you, my boy," said the doctor; Washington street, in the Pittock block. Clarence in Candyland.
