SUGAR PRICE HIGH UNDER TARIFF

Trust Only Beneficiary Under Reduction Provided in Underwood Bill.

FUTURE IS STILL DOUBTFUL

Retention of Clause Placing Product on Free List Depends on Wilson's Ability to Control Next Congress.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, Sept. 30.—The sugar imports into the United States during the fiscal year that ended June 30, 1915, a year when the sugar duty was 75 per cent of the rate which prevailed under the Republican protective tariff, exceeded those of the preceding year by $75,000,000.

The steady increase of sugar imports will continue to be surmised by the customs officials in the Treasury Department, and a big increase is looked for after May 1, unless Congress next session repeals the free sugar clause of the Underwood act.

It is doubtful, however, that some of the sugar imported by the United States was exported to Europe, for customs reports disclose that this country shipped to Europe during the past fiscal year something like 1,500,000,000 pounds more sugar than in the year previous.

When the Underwood tariff bill was being framed, the chief argument in favor of placing sugar on the free list was that it would reduce the price of sugar to the consumer.
