

FRONT IS FEARED OF BURSTING SHELL

Correspondent Sees Attack by Which German Redoubt of Hohenzollern Was Taken.

SMOKE STRANGELY VARIED

Lifting of Walls of Fire From Trench Front to Reserve Trenches Marks Progress of Assault. Battle Desperate.

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, Oct. 15, via London, Oct. 17.

—Along the Hilluch-Haines line, where the fighting has been almost continuous since the taking of Loos, a correspondent had an unprecedented view of the British attack which took the Hohenzollern redoubt.

From a vantage point in the front country was seen a stupendous panorama of artillery preparation and glimpses of infantry pushing through smoke and shells. So rapid was the fire that an effort to count the number of audible shots per minute from the British guns failed. In front, to the right and left, the German machine guns flashed and scattered shells over the landscape. A second lull in the firing by the batteries in the immediate neighborhood was filled by those farther away.

Bursting Shells Outline Trenches. The line of both the British and German trenches was discernible in long clouds of smoke from the bursting shells. That of the German trenches seemed smaller, in volume. No shells were seen bursting in Loos the self, which appeared peaceful now back of the British positions. For this tremendous concentration was restricted to a narrow theater against the frontal positions of the opposing side.

It was a warm and perfect Autumn day, a bright sun shining through banks of clouds amid which aeroplanes hovered. Rolling clouds of gas, rising up from the front, and the steam from the locomotive of a passing train above the edge of a cut, as it was released from the apparatus in the trenches, and the explosion of the explosion of every variety of shells. The reddish-black British shells and the coal-black German shells, nine-inch explosive shot through the lighted smoke in dense spurts, tinged at the bottom with dust from the trenches, while the explosion of a mine made a vast, mushroom-shaped column.

Variety of Shells Used.

Large caliber shrapnel bursting in the air made big, porous, white, high explosive bursting in the air caused big black puffs. There also were asphyxiating gas shells, and shells to assist the gunners and shells which dropped streaming points of fire like those from a skyrocket. The sun, shining through the clouds, above and below, made a mass of changing colors that was an eye-tiring spectacle. Now, toward Hilluch it was pink and toward Le Basse, dark green, and toward the Hohenzollern redoubt and Foss 8 the German parapet became visible for an instant, only to be hidden again. Avenues of trees along the roads, some of them cut down by shell fire, stood stripped like telephone poles of their limbs and foliage. There were to be seen the jagged ruins of villages, whence came a continuous ugly roar, which submerged the sound of the machine guns and rifles during the hour from 1 to 1:30 before the British infantry sprang from their trenches.

"Meanwhile, in the rear the miners of this mining country proceeded with their work; farmers were plowing; women going and coming in the villages or standing in the fields, and soldier support straining their eyes toward the battlefield or playing football, ready to find cover in the dugouts or cellars should their neighborhood be shelled.

The only way the progress of the attack could be told to an observer looking over the whole battlefield was by the lifting walls of fire of the British guns from the front to the reserve German trenches, while the British moved their back, presumably to punish the British reserves coming to support their front line.

CZAR'S GOAT IS CAPTURED

The mad "zeitungelleute" were laughing about the course of the December fighting the long, castelated railway station at Skiernewice, where the red carpets for royalty have so often been laid down, were badly shattered, but it is now well repaired and scrupulously clean. The czar's waiting room, however, still stands open to the sky and it will require numerous alterations in addition to a new roof, before he will care to use it again.

Everything which a coat of white-wash could be applied has been so treated, and soldiers are setting out plants in bits of greenward at one end of the train platform. A little periodical stand where you can buy the latest German magazines and editions of German classic plays bound in paper covers has been opened and the soldier whose train stops at Skiernewice for a few minutes can also buy a good sandwich for 5 cents and a glass of beer for 2 1/2 cents.

National Characteristics Shown.

I set down all these details because they are so entirely characteristic of the tasks of repairing and decorating which the Germans set themselves in all the railway stations along the vast stretches of country they have occupied on both fronts. They are methodical and thorough at this kind of thing than the Austrians are in the territory they occupy further to the south, and the French system, with matters were more at loose ends at the railway stations in France a week after the war had begun than they are now in some remote little Russian villages which the German have held for a few days. The difference seemed to me important because it spelled out national characteristics in such large print.

You can always depend upon a German soldier promptly to set the eating part of his quarters to rights. In the restaurant of the Skiernewice station there are flowers on the table and a menu that is amazing when you consider how far the food has to be transported. On the walls of the dining-room are three pictures of Field Marshal von Hindenburg and two of the German Emperor and one of the Crown Prince and one of John the Baptist, and of that selection I leave the theologians to make what they can.

Place Strangely Sedate. Cleanliness, comfort and low voices give a strangely sedate and well-ordered tone to this place, where you cannot walk a dozen paces without seeing shattered walls and unroofed windows and unglazed windows.

MAP SHOWING TEUTONIC-BULGAR DRIVE IN SERBIA.

How the German-Austrian and the Bulgarian forces are striking for a junction in Northern Serbia is shown in the map.

Iron Cross Made in Foliage.

The exterior of the czar's chateau is not pretentious, but the lawns and gardens around it are lovely. The stretch of lawn that drops away into a sunken garden is a masterpiece of landscape design.

Story of Tragedy Retold.

Here the town Prince Leopold of Bavaria had slept in recent days. Here was a door at the bottom of a stairway that led down and disclosed not only the tiny closet into which it opened, but also the fact that the door was unbolstered and formed the bed on which the sentries of the czar's household slept.

Captors Respect Treasures.

All the rest of it was very miscellaneous, very very shiny and very chandelery and reasonably tasteless, though one got the idea that it would light up gorgeously at night.

The fighting has been of the most desperate character and the results are highly unfavorable to us. We have committed every conceivable blunder in our methods of attempting to carry out the expedition.

O-W. R. & N. May Tap Willapa.

CENTRALIA, Wash., Oct. 17.—(Special.)—Following a visit by a traffic representative of the O-W. R. & N., all of the mills between here and South Bend to obtain data on the amount of freight shipped, a rumor is in circulation that the Harriman line is about to enter into an agreement with either the Northern Pacific or Milwaukee, whereby it will operate from Willapa Harbor. Such a plan was about consummated a year ago, but was abandoned when the lumber market took a slump.

TOMB OF NAPOLEON FRENCH WAR SHRINE

Nation Now Draws Inspiration From Life of Great Leader of Long Ago.

CROWDS VISIT INVALIDES

Patient People Wait in Galleries to Be Admitted to See Embodiment of New Hopes in Instruments of Battle.

BY CAROLYN WILSON. (Copyright, 1915, by the Chicago Tribune. Published by arrangement.)

PARIS, Sep. 21.—Peace had her shrines in Paris, I suppose. They were gay and frivolous, full of life and light and laughter. They were, perhaps, the opera, the racetrack at Auteuil, the Folies Bergeres. Not shrines, you say—but they were gathering places of great crowds and reflected the ideas of the people.

But now is war; and war has her shrine. Out of the peaceful, artistic nation have come warriors; out of nation of skeptics has come faith.

The two unexpected, uninvited traits have become part of every Frenchman and it is at the tomb of Napoleon that he finds the incarnation of these newly born emotions.

That majestic dome, with its magnificent pines, in the encircled midst of which lies the greatest man of the world in his simple grandeur, is the shrine of the French people.

Nation's Hopes Embodied.

In his history, in his courage, ambition, determination, they see the embodiment of their hopes today. I sometimes wonder if they think upon his end and if it stirs for a vague, uncomprehensible second their supreme faith in the success of their cause.

The pale blue light filtered in through the invisible windows of the high dome and enveloped in an atmosphere of cool aloofness the sarcophagus, the statue of victory, the torch and faded flags. And over the broad balustrade 10,000 eyes gazed down upon the simple, inornate tomb.

"Joffre of Long Ago."

By my side were some Senegalese to whom a Frenchman was explaining in simple language the grandeur of Napoleon, and I liked his patriotism in omitting Beresina and St. Helena. "I am sure," he said, "that Joffre is the Joffre of long ago."

Crowds Wait Patiently.

Patient crowds stood a hundred long in the two galleries on either side of the court, waiting to be admitted 10 at a time to a view of the instruments of this war. There are shells and bombs and hand grenades of every belief and persuasion, daggers, knives, bayonets, mizulawes, cannons, models of aeroplanes, armored cars, steel arrows, asphyxiating masks—everything that has to do with the war of today.
