A five-piece orchestra will furnish the music. Elaborate decorations will be used and refreshments served. The public is invited.

A masquerade ball will be given by the Ladies of the Modern Masoches at Myrtle Park ball tomorrow night.

WOMEN'S CLUBS

By EDITH KNIGHT HOLMES

Mrs. J. N. Davis, president of Multnomah Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, returned yesterday from Salem, where she was in conference with Mrs. Isaac Lee Patterson, state regent; Mrs. J. P. Frizzell and other "daughters." The women of Salem eligible to membership are planning to organize a chapter there as soon as the permit comes from Washington, D. C. They will start with 29 members. Mrs. Frizzell gave a reception for Mrs. Davis, inviting several prominent women to meet her.

In Dallas the first organization of Children of the American Revolution will be started with Evelyn M. Sibley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Sibley, as the first charter member. Dallas is a wide-awake town, having the only other branch of the Needlework Guild outside of Portland in the State of Oregon.

Nine new members have been added to Multnomah Chapter recently and the programmes at the regular meetings are well attended and enjoyed.

Miss Nora Linton, who ably occupied the position as matron of the Old People's Home for about two years, is no longer connected with the institution. Her successor is Miss C. F. Allen.

The Junior exhibit of the Vernon School was held in the manual training building on Monday afternoon and is intended to reach and this cannot be said of all associations of your kind throughout the state.

Y. W. C. A. girls are looking forward to the first big social event of the season—the Halloween party, to be held on Saturday night.

Miss Helen Armstrong, of the New York Y. W. C. A. worker, has been put in charge of the social activities to relieve Miss Chapler, whose duties in the other departments have made it impossible for her to continue as the head of this department. Any girl who feels the need of the friendship of other girls and who would enjoy attending a jolly party is invited to come to the association on Saturday and participate in the fun that is planned for that occasion.

Mrs. William D. Wheelwright, of the Y. W. C. A. board, recently was appointed chairman of the committee on "travelers' work," to succeed Mrs. Frederick H. Strong, who recently resigned.

The opening of the junior exhibition at the Library today will claim attention of all the parent-teacher associations. The children have done some clever work in connection with the back-to-the-home movement and this will be on display October 28 to November 6. All who are interested in seeing what children can accomplish when their talents are directed in the right way will be welcome to attend the exhibition.

The general meeting of the Portland Psychology Club will be one of today's important club events. The lessons this season are said by the members to be most inspiring and helpful. Mrs. Alva Lee Stephens is president of the Portland Psychology Club and of the Portland Parent-Teacher Association.

The woman's auxiliary to the Railway Mail Association will meet on Saturday with Mrs. C. P. Cannon. Take Oregon Electric car at 10'clock, Jefferson street depot, and get off at Metzger Station.

The regular monthly luncheon of the Portland chapters of the P. E. O. Sisterhood will be held Friday at 12:30 o'clock in the tearoom of Olds, Wortman & King. All P. E. O. members welcome.

Mrs. Della S. Lithgow, a prominent settlement worker of New York City, was a recent visitor at the Young Women's Christian Association. She was greatly impressed with the work the Portland branch is doing. Of it she said to Miss Lina B. James, the general secretary: "You seem to be reaching the class of girls that your institution is intended to reach and this cannot be said of all associations of your kind throughout the state.

in amazement, and Veda asked: "Where is your breakfast, Uncle?" he replied, "I am too poor to eat," he replied, "and if you are going to eat like this you will ruin me."

"But, Uncle," said Norma, "we are not poor; our father left plenty of money. Let us support you. We will go back to our home and you can come with us. We cannot live on such food as this."

"Grass soup is good enough for you, and as for your money, your father did not leave any. He lost all of it before he died, and you are as poor as I am. I have given you a home and now you find fault," and the shy old man hid his face in his hands as though he were weeping.

"But, Uncle, we are so sorry," said Norma. "We did not know that and we will never again find fault. You are very kind to take us."

But Veda thought it all very strange and told her sisters so when they were alone. One night shortly after that Veda was awakened by seeing a light under her door. She looked through a crack and saw her uncle with a candle in his hand walking down the long hall. Suddenly the panel flew open and the very carefully opened the door and crept along close to the wall and saw the miser unlock a door and go into a room at the end of the castle. She hurried after him and saw through a crack in the door that he was feeling along the wall on one side of the room. Suddenly he entered and closed it after him.

He entered, and closed it after him. (Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate, New York City.)

WOMEN WHO LEAD THE WAY

By MARIE DILLE.

MISS MARION CARTERETT, "Broncho Buster,"

MRS. MARION CARTERETT, champion "broncho buster" of Nevada, has perhaps been the subject of more comment because of her reckless daring than any other woman in her state. She is not brave in the strict sense of the word, for she has never known the meaning of fear. She has never recoiled from a failure, and she has her mental attitude has proved a faithful guide.

The girl champion won her spurs last year in a competition with the most skilled horsemen in the West. She successfully competed with women representing eight states, and she emerged triumphant with a record of 100 per cent. Her unusual ability and daring attracted much attention and she was induced to enter a contest with the men riders of Nevada.

Miss Carterett is the only woman in the United States who has succeeded in riding at least three "outlaw" horses that have been responsible for the death of skilled men riders. Her experiences with the animals have resulted in several broken bones when the horses turned about and fell upon her after trying in vain to throw her.

The horsewoman is skilled with the reins as well as in the saddle. For almost a year she was engaged as a driver of a mountain coach for one of the well-known stage coach lines. She drove eight horses together at this time.

She has even accomplished the greater art of driving a team line. This is recognized as the master degree in horsemanship. In the line were 14 horses. This method of driving consists of using a single line, which is placed at the outside ring of the lead-cast bit. A gentle tug at the line and the horse will turn in one direction and a sharp jerk will cause him to turn the other. The driver rides one horse and the reins are held by voice. The fine distinction between the tug and the jerk is not easily acquired nor imparted to the animals and the voice by

"Oh, Uncle," she asked, "have we to walk much farther along?" "My castle is farther along," was all the reply he would make. At last Norma asked if that was the only way to reach his castle.

"Yes," said the old miser—for he was a miser—"this is the only road, so we never are bothered with company. Just then they came in sight of a ruin of a castle. Uncle, that we should lead a gay life in your castle," said Veda. "This old place looks as though it would tumble."

"Come; my home; you can go back if you do not like it," said the miser. But he knew that they could not find their way back to their home, for it was nearly dark and the poor sisters were footsore and hungry. But he did not offer them any supper and took them to a room of the floor of which was covered with straw.

"This is where you sleep," he said, "and you had better go to bed."

Nina began to cry. "I am hungry," she said, "and we cannot sleep on the floor; have you no beds?" "This is the same as I sleep on," he said, "and it will have to do for you."

"But, Uncle," said Norma, "surely you will give us something to eat." He went away and returned with a few crusts of bread and a jug of milk. The sisters were so hungry that they ate it and cried themselves to sleep.

In the morning they were up early and looked around the castle. The tower at one end had crumbled away, the doors hung by a hinge, and the few articles of furniture they saw were almost useless.

At last they saw their uncle coming from the doors hung by a hinge, and out of room, the door of which was locked.

"We want our breakfast, Uncle," said Veda.

"Well, come with me," said the old miser, "you seem always to be hungry; you were hungry last night." He led the way to a room at the end of the castle and lighted a fire in the fireplace. Over it he hung a kettle and put water in it. He then went out and gathered some grass and this he put into the kettle and added an onion and salt. He brought three tin dishes and three rusty spoons and put them on a broken table. Then he poured the contents of the kettle into the dishes and gave each sister a crust of bread. The sisters had watched him
