Robert Fay Offers to Turn State's Evidence in Munition Conspiracy.

PREVIOUS STORY VERIFIED

Secret Service Chief and Special Federal Attorney Are Authorized to Continue Their Investigation in New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Robert Fay, who, with four others, is held on a charge of attempting to blow up munition ships, had a long talk in the city today with William J. Flynn, chief of the United States Secret Service, and John C. Knox, special assistant United States attorney, and as a result, it was said, he offered to turn state's evidence. Fay's reported offer to aid the government in its efforts to get at the bottom of the conspiracy in this country to destroy ships carrying munitions to the allies, followed the news here today from Washington of Chief Flynn and Snowden Marshall, United States district attorney.

RUSSIANS HIDE MUCH FOOD

WAR FILMS ARE THRILLING

Helig Audience Is Stirred by Scenes of Battle Charges.

Actual battle scenes on the Galician front in the European war were shown last night for the first time, at the Helig, the opening scene of the famous Chicago Tribune pictures of the war from the German side.

These pictures were taken by Edwin P. Weigle, the Tribune operator, who brought back to the United States the first motion pictures of the campaign in Belgium. The Belgian pictures were shown under the auspices of the Tribune and 50 per cent of the earnings were turned over to the Belgian Red Cross.

The present run of German pictures is being shown on the same basis. Hugo J. Hanf is the lecturer who presents the pictures, but little comment is needed on them, for the scenes are for the most part self-explanatory with the aid of the film captions.

Weigle has made use of the telephone in his series of films, and by this device is enabled to present some startling scenes of the infantry charges in the assault upon Ypres by the Germans. Other interesting "long distance" films show aerial shells and high explosives bursting over the Russian trenches, three miles or more from the spot where the camera is stationed.

Getting out of the interior into the actual scene of fighting, one sees some powerful and striking scenes. At one place there is shown a regiment hiding in reserve in the forest. The command to advance is given and the audience sits with excitement as the masses of men spring to their feet and hurl themselves out from the covert, spread out into long lines and charge forward toward the enemy trenches.

MUSICIANS NOW ARE OUT

Union Is Fought at Helig Until After Play Is Given.

Although the musicians remained in the Helig throughout the show Saturday night, orders were delivered to them at the close of the show to walk out.

The order to strike was sent before the show opened, but Manager Pangle suspected that if he allowed the men who bore it inside the theater it would mean that the orchestra was to be disbanded.

"I held him out of the theater as long as I could to prevent him from serving the order," he said. "Had he served it, the breathing of the show would have meant not only that the show would have been embarrassed, but that the men in the orchestra would lose their money, and I was determined to prevent this if possible, for the musicians and stood by us the best they could, and I wanted to see that they got what was coming to them."

It was one of the strangest paradoxes imaginable, to see three union men on the stage, a full union orchestra playing, and a man singing a banner in front of the theater urging union sympathizers to stay away and not go in and help their own people get their money.

Mr. Pangle declares that the entire trouble is to be laid at the door of a clique in the Central Labor Council which is working for personal advancement. The principal trouble-maker, he says, has been William McKenzie, president of the engineers' union, who precipitated the present trouble.

Three stars have been making all the trouble he could.

The manager of the "When Dreams Come True" company has announced that he has decided to seek redress from the Central Labor Council for the loss of salaries of his company on the first night, which he holds to be the fault of the union representatives to give suitable warning of their move in time before they called the strike.

Although no definite discussion of the matter of the symphony concerts has been made, it is the opinion of officials of both the theater and the orchestra that the present trouble will make no difference in the schedule of concerts which the orchestra is to give.

PAJAMAS WORN AT DANCE

All Guests at Fashionable Gathering Wear Sleeping Costumes.

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Persons passing the house of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert W. Lockwood, in South Orange, N. J., did not peek in, even though they knew and had known for weeks that there was to be a pajama party there. The party was given for a small dinner and provided a large evening.

The rules regarding the event were entirely free of restrictions, for the class, as a class, was made to know that even a pajama or a set of them may be so worn as to appear entirely conventional. And that was what all members of the class were rather anxious to avoid.

Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood were dressed as twins in costumes of white, with trim and decorations, and the rest of the class, appearing remarkably classy, were pajamas of various blues and mediums. All had a mighty pleasant evening, and the party was a success.

GIRL'S FACE WORTH $1329

New Jersey Court Fixes Value of Young Woman's Beauty.

NEWTON, N. J., Nov. 9.—Important divorce case was heard by the Superior Court when it declared: "We cannot say $1329 is excessive in the case of a girl whose face may be her fortune."

This momentous decision was reached in the suit brought by Rose Goldberger against the Peter Breidl Brewing Company, of Elizabeth. Miss Goldberger, 21, is a former actress and model, and was a member of the local school, and was a member of the First Methodist Church.

"Do man don't really need advice," said Uncle Eben, "is generally 'bout de only one dat's willing to listen to it respectful."—Washington Star.

a graceful salute. At the same time he thought the cyclist was trying to pass him, and just to prove the thing he did, he gave the car about its limit and, without looking back, soon forgot the incident.

A few more minutes passed and then, to his surprise, here came the same individual again. He made another signal, more peremptory this time, and the truth suddenly dawned upon Mr. Woodruff. He immediately slowed down and came to a stop.

The officer was polite. "You were going some," he said. "I'll have to do it. You will have to come to the Sheriff's office and explain."

Two humbled players opened the second act of this little drama by appearing in the august presence of Sheriff Hurlburt later on. They came out wiser and more experienced, and doubtless poorer.

"Well, Ted didn't break the law with any malicious intent," said Regan, "but you ought to have seen his face when he tumbled to that second signal."

BEAR FIGHTS FOR KEEPER

Mate Attacked When She Tries to Pounce on Man.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Tim, a big polar bear in the Central Park menagerie, saved the life of Tim Coyle, a keeper for whom he was named. Coyle had drained the tank of water, and the bear, named Tim, was in the bottom of the tank when Molly sprang down from a rock and leaped into the water.

Since his cubhood days Tim had been the particular pet of Coyle. He watched Molly, and when he saw his mate about to attack the keeper he sprang from a crag, landed in the tank and fastened his teeth in Molly's throat.

The bears fought in the tank, giving Coyle time to escape from the cage. Bill Hurd and his assistant keepers had to pry the bears apart with sharp-pointed instruments. Molly's throat was cut and both had wounds from teeth, but Tim had saved Tim Coyle.

Neighbors who have seen the boy say that they believe he is on trial and if he proves himself a valuable keeper for the park, he will be promoted to a permanent position.
