

PRESS CLUB HOST TO MR. McCALL

After-Dinner Reception Held in Honor of Governor-Elect of State of Massachusetts.

Little Reference Made to Politics by Guest, Who, However, Urges Republicans to Embody Progressive Planks in Platform.

GOVERNOR-ELECT OF MASSACHUSETTS AND HIS CAMPAIGN MANAGER, WHO WERE GUESTS OF PORTLAND-PRESS CLUB LAST NIGHT.

Next time Samuel W. McCall, Republican Governor-elect of Massachusetts, comes to Portland—and he said last night that he intends to return soon—he will head straight for the quarters of the Portland Press Club.

That was his parting word as he and Charles P. Baxter, who managed the campaign that resulted in Mr. McCall's election a few weeks ago by the largest vote ever polled by a candidate for Governor of Massachusetts, a result that has been taken all over the country as a sign of Republican success at next year's Presidential election, as they boarded a Southern Pacific train for San Francisco at 8:15 o'clock last night.

Governor-elect McCall and Mr. Baxter were guests of honor at a dinner and reception at the Press Club in between trains. As they arrived at the Union Depot at 5:25 o'clock from Central Oregon, where they have been resting up for a week on the ranch of Henry McCall, the Governor's son, they were met by Leslie M. Scott and O. C. Latta as a special committee from the Press Club.

"Does it usually rain like this in Oregon?" asked the Governor quizzically, as he stared himself in a mirror of a camera man with a flashlight in obedience to orders.

"This is the real Oregon mist," Mr. Latta informed him.

"Probably that is what makes things grow so well here," responded the Governor. And he speedily let it be known that Oregon mist had no terrors for him.

At the Press Club a good dinner was waiting. Mr. Scott, as president of the club, sat at the head of the table. Those at the dinner were:

After the dinner came the reception. Among those who had the honor of the Press Club on purpose to meet Mr. McCall were ex-United States Senator Charles W. Fulton, who had known Mr. McCall in Washington when he was a Representative in Congress; W. N. Gates, Circuit Judge; John H. Stevens, Municipal Judge; and ex-Sheriff Robert L. Stevens, and before the Governor left the club many other steps in to meet him.

Mr. McCall politely but firmly kept politics in the background, though several persons referred to the fact that he had become a Presidential possibility through his notable success in Massachusetts.

"The Governor's justly deserved commendation at such remarks and said that a man must take too seriously everything that he hears.

Political Reference Made. He made only one political reference in a brief address. Two or three weeks ago there was an election which seemed to obviate the necessity of my continuing to talk, and I came out here to Oregon with the purpose of not talking at all."

"Oregon is known all over the United States," he said later, making the only political reference in his speech. "I have certain ideas in politics with which all of us do not agree, and it has others which we think very good."

"Massachusetts," he continued, "in the past had certain political ideas which spread from there through the country. These ideas came West and were adopted here. And now Oregon has ideas which are traveling East."

"The trend of political ideas is now from the West toward the East."

Later, he became editor of the Oregon Advertiser, a position he held for several years.

Mr. Baxter also spoke. Mr. Baxter managed Theodore Roosevelt's campaign in Massachusetts in 1912, and afterwards went to the Chicago convention at the head of the Roosevelt delegates-at-large from that state. He remained with the Republican party, however, when the Progressive bolt occurred, and as he explained:

"As a progressive Republican, I did what I could to have Mr. McCall nominated and elected as Governor of Massachusetts."

Republican Victory Predicted. "We had a very progressive platform," he continued. "I think the world has gone out from Massachusetts that if the people of the country will do as the people of Massachusetts did, we will have a Republican victory next year."

Though he did not discuss politics at the reception, Mr. McCall gave briefly his view of the political situation in an interview with a reporter of the Oregonian.

"I regard my own election as due in great part to the fact that we had a progressive platform," he explained. "I had felt that we should have a progressive platform, and worked personally to get such a platform."

"The reason was that, although the Progressives still maintained a separate organization and put up a candidate of their own, they polled only 18,000 votes to 127,000 votes cast for Charles Sumner Byrd, the Progressive candidate for Governor, at a previous election. Mr. Byrd and the rank and file of the Progressive party supported my candidacy."

"The split in the Republican party has been healed in Massachusetts. Of that there can be no doubt. The fact that the Republican party embodied progressive principles in its platform was a big factor in bringing this about. Now we must live up to our pledges, and we shall do so. I have no doubt that under these circumstances the Republicans will again win Massachusetts next year."

"The same results can be achieved nationally if the Republican party will renounce the progressive element in the party and embody progressive principles in its platform. If that is done, I have no doubt that the Republicans will elect the next President."
