

CONVICT GOES BACK ON HIS CONFESSION

Denville Double Crosses Government by Pleading Not Guilty to Charge.

OFFICIALS ARE SURPRISED

Action Makes Case Against Granville for Robbing Postoffice Station Harder and Is Likely Due to Mack's Escape.

J. C. Denville, whose present residence address is State Penitentiary, Salem, Or., where he is serving a term for forgery, neatly double-crossed the United States Attorney's office yesterday when he pleaded not guilty before Federal Judge John H. Wayland in a charge of conspiracy in the robbery of Postoffice Station A in Portland last February 12. Inasmuch as a confession made by Denville is already in the hands of Assistant United States Attorney Johnson, who is handling the case, it was thought that Denville, Granville and Denville, indicted jointly for the same offense, had been expected to plead guilty and be a witness for the Government.

Mack's Escape Relieved Cases.
His change of heart is believed to be due to the escape of Mack, whose true name is Frederick McGuire, whose Postoffice Station A was held by Mack in charge of two guards of the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., on its way to Portland for trial.

He fooled the guards by the old trick of going into the lavatory, slapping and locking the door, and jumping out through a window.

Although most of Postoffice Inspectors under Chief Inspector Richardson of Spokane, is working through the wild territory about Sand Point in search of him, no favorable news had been received last night.

It would surprise the authorities greatly if Mack were not recaptured at all as he has the run of what is described as a second Jackson's Hole country, most of the inhabitants of which are hostile to any kind of law.

As everybody is supposed to know, Jackson's Hole is the most famous rendezvous of escaped criminals in the United States. If a fugitive once gets safely into the Jackson's Hole district, his recapture is largely a matter of luck or his own foolishness.

Story of Crime Related.

According to his confession, Denville was a member of a gang of which Mack and Granville were the principals which engineered the Station A robbery. Postmaster A. G. Ott was held up at the point of a revolver and handcuffed in a chair, while the two men who did the job, whom Ott recognized were Mack and Granville, opened the safe, ransacked registered mail and got away with about $150 in cash, several thousand stamps and a batch of blank money-order forms.

It was through these money orders that Mack was able to get to Port Huron, Mich. The evening before he had attempted to cash one of the money orders with a forged signature at the Hotel Postcharrain, Detroit. The clerk, becoming suspicious, looked up a list of stolen money-orders and found that this particular order was one stolen from Station A.

Mack made a sensational getaway, which included the holdup of a chauffeur and commandeering of his auto, in which Mack rode to the city limits. Postoffice inspectors have been unable to find Mack, and arrested him there at Port Huron, and arrested him there next morning as he was stepping off a train.

Mack's Escape Sensational.

In the meantime it developed that others of the stolen money orders, each for $100, had been addressed to him at the Detroit hotel.

Mack had cashed forged money orders in Minneapolis. He was tried on this offense and sentenced to Leavenworth penitentiary. Federal authorities here desired to try him with Granville and Denville for the Station A robbery, however, and had him sent to Port Huron.

Granville was picked up in a Seattle harbor shop he had just bought a few days after Mack's arrest. He has been in custody ever since.

Then came the implication of Denville, and his subsequent confession. Denville, who is a little man with a protruding nose, a receding chin and a wide smile, was asked Judge Wolverton for time to consult counsel.

"Haven't you had time to consult counsel?" asked the judge. "This case has been set for some months."

"I was in the pastures—er, the institutions at Salem," responded Denville. "I had no opportunity to consult a lawyer."

Judge Wolverton appointed John M. Pines, of Portland, a son of Martin L. Pines, to defend Denville. The judge had previously appointed Mr. Pines counsel for Granville.

"I am perfectly willing to undertake the defense of Denville," said Mr. Pines, "but there is a possibility that the interests of the two may conflict."

With the understanding that in event of conflict he would be taken, he accepted the assignment.

After a conference between Assistant United States Attorney Johnson, Mr. Pines and Judge Wolverton, the judge announced in the case of the so-called "two-potato" he would not prosecute to the end. This morning he instructed the veniremen to report at that time.

This complication was generally believed in the courtroom to have to do with the escape of Mack. With the hope of Mr. Johnson that he might be captured in time to be brought to trial now.

Granville is credited with having made the remark, after learning of Mack's escape, that he would escape himself before the day was out, if he was not in court yesterday by three Deputy United States Marshals still another deputy and United States Marshal Montag himself were also in the courtroom.

HUNTING VICTIM IS BURIED

Funeral of Emery Henderson Held From Dayton.

DAYTON, Wash., Nov. 22.—(Special)—The funeral of Emery Henderson, the boy who was shot while coon hunting last Saturday, was held in Dayton Tuesday, with interment in the local cemetery.

Four coons had been tramped, and as they could not get away on account of the heavy branches the boy went up to dislodge them. He got one out of the tree, and called that he had found another, and at that his father fired. Nothing was heard for a time, and when he went to see what was wrong, he found that the boy had been shot through the head and was dead. The bullet went through one temple and out through the top of his head, so death was instantaneous. The Sheriff was called, as they did not know what to do, but the case was plain, and all

HEADQUARTERS FOR MUTS TO OPEN SOON

Campaign for Alleviating Suffering Among Needy Is to Begin at Once.

MANY VOLUNTEERS ENLIST

Every Cent Contributed to Order Will Carry Guarantee of Being Spent on Poor and Not for Organization's Expense.

THE OPENING FEATURE OF MUTS RELIEF CAMPAIGN.

Hearing that scarcely any assistance has been offered the Associated Charities and the Oregon's Institute in preparing for Thanksgiving cheer for the poor, the Muts have decided to launch their Winter relief campaign by taking up this work today.

Arrangements have been made with Secretary V. R. Manning of the Charities, that names and addresses of 100 families in need shall be turned over to the Muts, who agree to see that they are taken care of with Thanksgiving baskets.

considerable interest being shown by those qualified to vote at the city election in Chehalis next Saturday, November 27.

Two propositions of considerable local interest are to be submitted: The granting of a franchise to conduct a telephone and telegraph business and the validation of $25,607 in unpaid expense fund warrants.

Provision is made also for financing the said indebtedness by issuing bonds to bear interest at not to exceed 6 per cent.

Headquarters will be selected by the Muts today, and they will open at once the campaign, which will consist of the suffering of the poor of the city through the Winter holiday season.

Examination was made yesterday of several sites for headquarters in the downtown section of the city by a committee consisting of Ivan Humanus, H. G. Terry, who will make a formal report to-day. The headquarters will be situated out and ready for the beginning of work by Friday or Saturday at least.

At the meeting of the Muts executive committee, held at the Portland Hotel, yesterday, the organization voted to carry out the campaign on the "100 per cent efficiency" plan which worked with such satisfactory and wholesome results last Winter. In other words, the Muts will guarantee that for every dollar received by them 100 cents will go to the direct relief of poverty and distress, the overhead expenses being absorbed by donation of time and service and by assessment against the individual members of the Muts.

Many Volunteers Appear.

A large number of volunteers, working mostly of the retired and others, most of whom were active on the "drive line" a year ago, have already tendered their services for the campaign this year.

As was the case last year, the extent to which the Muts will be able to alleviate need and privation will depend upon the amount of money and contributions which are received from those who desire to join this "good fellowship" brigade. As rapidly as the money is received by the Muts it will be turned into the channels where it will do good service.

The Muts will not go out and make an aggressive campaign for funds, but will generously send in such funds as are voluntarily sent in. The same will apply to material and supplies, fuel and provisions of all kinds.
