MIKE GIBBONS ILL; FIGHT POSTPONED

If Gibbons is able to resume training next Monday the bout will take place December 17.

If Gibbons ever does meet Young Ahern he will find facing him a different man than the Young Ahern he met in 1912. Ahern's rise has been one of the remarkable transitions of the ring.

On June 13, 1913, Mike Gibbons emiled, rubbed his nose a little, and then anapped his right against Young Ahern's jaw. Ahern went down—and stayed down. Easy for Mike!

Bluce then—a-ah! That's another story. Ahern went to Europe, Traveling is a great educator, they say. Ahern found it so—he learned how to fight. He knocked out the French champion, Adrien Hogan, and the English champion, Private Braddock, and so became champion middleweight of Europe. (Ahern was born in England, though raised in Brooklyn.) Half-strides. What is nerve? We've seen many a slashing football player hit a line with-out a quiver—and then some months afterward curl up and quit before a hree-foot putt.

The big start toward nerve is knowng how. The rest of it is a pipe, ing how. The rest of it is a pipe, taking on an average count.
