Frozen in the Columbia River above Cape Horn, Wash., with the wind blow-Cape Horn, Wash, with the wind blowing so hard for days that a strong man is unable to stand erect, the steamer Tahoma, Captain Charles Nelson, awaits the breaking of the lee pan with the danger ever lurking that she will be crushed like an eggsheil.

The captain and a small crew are aboard the boat with sufficient provisions, ready to act as soon as the jam beging to break up. Twenty passengers were aboard the boat when she became fast, but they succeeded in reaching shore on ice floes the next day.

Steamer Trapped by Ice.

The Tahoma on January 5 got within half a mile of The Delles, Or., but was forced to turn back. For three days and nights Captain Nelson was at the wheel dodging ice floes and piloting the plucky little steamer in turbulent and ley waters.

On the morning of January 6, Thursday, the Tahoma started for Portiand, picking up passengers at Hood River, Underwood, Cooks and other way points, The Ice was getting worse, but the pilot at the wheel was in hopes of reaching a point below Cape Horn. Captain Nelson, worn out and completely exhausted by three nights without sleep, was taking a map in his cabin.

At 3 P. M. the steamer was about a mile and a half above Cape Horn, on the down-stream trip, when the ice suddenly became so thick that the Tahoma, making several inefectual plyun plunges, stopped. She could not back out, ice being so thick.

Two women, Mrs. Smith, of Underwood, and Mrs. Brock, of Cooks, were two of the 20 passengers.

The snow was so thick that the first party leaving the boat to try to find a route to shore was lost sight of in the first 100 feet. The party had to turn back, then Captain Nelson and a decknand went out and got within about 100 feet of the bank, when open water forced them to go upstream nearly half a mile before they could land.

They went back to the Tahoma then and led a party of about a dozen safely to shore, and they walked to Cape Horn. The women and remaining passengers were then take ashore.

Captain Nelson let all of the crew go home except Charles Kern, engineer; John Featherstone, steward, and Tom Shepherd, mate. Enough cil is left to steam to Portland when the fee breaks. They have a trail to the bank and can reach Cape Horn for supplies. They also have on board 100 boxes of Hood River apples, so Captain Nelson asid, "It is not so bad as it could be."

Captain Nelson hopes that the ice will break up slowly and this will give them a chance to save the boat if it does not happen to be carried against a rock and crushed.
