PERHAPS it is just as well that the birthday of two of our greatest Americans are celebrated this month and that we take pause to think upon their lives. Looking back upon what they stood for and how they guided our ship of state in perilous times may steady us a bit now. Each age brings its problems and

The founding of a nation that should stand for individual liberty and equal opportunity was a big job. It taxed the powers of those who undertook it to the utmost. But they succeeded. Today this Nation they founded, those rights of man they upheld, is in the world arena as it was not then, and we have to stand for principles as important to the world progress as were those principles to the Nation founded upon them. Shall we fail? Shall be prove unworthy of those early patriots? Shall we discredit and make of none effect their work?

Our forefathers believed that man could govern himself, and they were willing to stand or fall by what they believed. The years have proven them right. But today, new and as equally big tasks are ours. We have more to do than merely to wave flags and shout "Democracy can be a success."

We have to step forward as boldly for new doctrines as did this handful of earnest men and women some 150 years ago for freedom.

The big question of permanent peace or possible war is our today to help

The big question of permanent peace or possible war is our today to help settle. The heart-scarching question, "Am I my brother's keeper" looms up industrially and socially.
