I most of us, far off in both directions. The one which gives us hope, happened centuries ago. The one we look forward to is to happen in some unknown future. Neither seems to enter immediately into our life, except as a promise.

When this resurrection which is to happen at some time and somewhere, and which was promised aforetime, really takes place, we think of ourselves after that event, if we think of it at all, as quite different from what

Our Resurrection.

THE resurrection is a far-off event to I most of us, far off in both direc-

we are at present. Somehow or other We are going to be perfect. We will have qualities that we haven't now. We will do things then we can't do now. We will be a made-over indi-ome far-off time to develop those fac iltles which we deem desirable?

Might it not be worth while to see hat perfect being we want to become, r believe we will become, and then go b work to realize this perfection now? It may not only be the elimination of certain undesirable qualities that is go-ing to take place, but the acquisition of certain desirable ones that is to help toward this perfection. And it may not only be moral qualities we hope to achieve, but certain things we want

A man remarked rather fiercely in my hearing once "he hoped he wouldn't have to lay bricks in Heaven"; and another said if he had his life to live over again— which is another way of speaking of the resurrection, isn't it—he certainly wouldn't choose to be a dentist.

If we have these longings, if we list the production referred to is Port of the resurrection, isn't it—he certainly wouldn't choose to be a dentist.

If we have these longings, if we list the production referred to is Port of Company and the world is grown in the southern part of Oregon, according to F. C. Knapp, president of the Peninvision ourselves at some future time as port of Oregon, according to F. C. Knapp, president of the Peninvision ourselves at some future time as something better or more worth while than we are at present, why not resurrect that self of ours right now? Why not fetch it forth and start it to living? If we want to be a musician, why not start the study of music now and persons in a few short years have that start the study of music now and perhaps in a few short years have that musical self of ours in full life and vigor. If there is some other occupation we want, some other method of living, why not make a beginning in it, even though it be a small one. Everything starts from some little seed, from some initial effort. And no matter how hopeless the outlook seems, if we will study the situation honestly, in nine cases out of ten we will find some way to begin.

After all what is the resurrection but

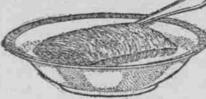

After all what is the resurrection but After all what is the resurrection but a rising into a new sense of life, into a rising into a new sense of life, into a rising into a new sense of life, into a rising into a new sense of life, into a rising into a new sense of life, into a fuller and larger life? How is it to come to us first, except through our consciousness, or our thinking? Why wait for left into thought now, where the signatures of all the baseball players and attaches are written in link upon them.

After all what is the resurrection but a rising into a new sense of life, into a fuller and larger life? How is it to come to us first, except through our consciousness, or our thinking? Why annot we bring it into thought now, and then into our experience?

Let us get fight down to plain facts, and think out what the resurrection really means to us. Let us forget dogmas by pitching the first ball. The solution of the Boosters' Club.

The Mayor figured in the opening game by pitching the first ball. The Boosters have given him the ball he construction really means to us. Let us forget dogmas and creed and think it out for our-

And then let's see if it basn't in it something of value for us right it the present moment. The divine far-off event of which we have been taught may become in part a present possibility.

TOM RICHARDSON SAYS FINANCIAL COWARDICE IS CRIME.

Business Depression Held Momentary and Need of Public Improvements Is Urged.

"Too much nessimism" is the way rom Richardson accounts for the hostility displayed at the taxpayers' meetting last Saturday to his suggestion that the state embark in a substantial oend issue and improve some of its roads, now that money is cheap.

"I believe, moreover," said Mr. Richardson yesterday, "that if the bond proposal is presented to the people properly they will favor it. It is good business, it is common sense. It is economy. It is a stepping stone toward the era of prosperity that is sure to come. "It is a crime against common-sense economy for Oregon people to become cowards in times like this. The cheapest money that has been available in modern times now offers itself to the people of this Northwest. Heretofore when money was tight we prayed for it to be cheap. Now that it is cheap, we push it aside on account of a temporary—a momentary—depression.

"But if you stop and look at the situation you will learn that times are not so dull, after all. I have been away from Portland for a year or more, and I find upon my return that the streets actually are busier than when I went "We are the best-built city in first
