J. L. KERCHEN DROPPED

ACTION TAKEN BY SCHOOL BOARD IN SECRET SESSION.
Dismissal of Manual Training Department Head Due to Charges Made by Four Subordinates.

J. L. Kerchen, for five years superintendent of manual training in Portland public schools, is to be dropped from the service at once. The School Board at a session behind closed doors Monday voted unanimously for his dismissal on the strength of charges of unfitness preferred against him by four teachers in his department, which have been thoroughly aired in an investigation extending over two months. Mr. Kerchen was accused by Andrew Bauer, J. W. A. Mancur, V. E. Christensen and Leon LaForge of a number of misdeeds, including an alleged plan on his part to instill radical religious ideas of his own into the minds of his teachers and pupils; causing dissension and friction among teachers, falsely posing as a graduate of the University of Chicago; placing a boycott on Jefferson High School and exhibiting at the San Francisco Exposition a number of models as representing the work of pupils in the Portland schools whereas the work was done largely by teachers. Mr. Kerchen presented many witnesses to disprove the charges. He denied most of the charges and scoffed at the others as trifling. He admitted having certain liberal ideas on the subject of religion, but denied any attempt to instill these views in others. Members of the School Board have not decided upon a successor. It was arranged to hold the position open temporarily pending inquiries into the fitness of a number of persons said to be available.

IF THE furnishings and appointments of the home are made to measure up to the Chickering standard of excellence, the result will, indeed, be a "home beautiful." The Chickering piano stands for the best in piano construction. It is built on the principles as laid down by that man of genius, Jonas Chickering, years ago and which are so sacredly adhered to by his successors. No piano leaves the factory unless it is fine enough to bear his name. And that means "100% perfect" on any scale of judgment you may choose. To own a Chickering means to own a treasure, one which will prove a continual source of delight.

We are sole agents and shall be pleased to show you our fine stock of Chickering uprights, players and grands. The oldest in America, the best in the world.
