

4 ADDRESSES HEARD

Report on Philomath College Made by President.

RELIGIOUS TEACHING URGED

United Brethren Conference Approves Work of Anti-Saloon League and Law Prohibiting Liquor Purchase Proposed.

The address of President Lloyd L. Epley, of Philomath College, report of Mrs. C. H. Wainwright on education, and the address of J. D. Niswonger on temperance, with the address of R. P. Hutton, of the Anti-Saloon League, occupied the time of the Oregon conference of the United Brethren Church yesterday, in session at Second Church.

In the reports on education the public schools were censured for lack of religious and moral instructions, while such institutions as Philomath College were commended because they taught religion and morality.

President Epley made an address on the work of the church, and said that Philomath College is making good progress. The academy there, he said, had been recognized by the University of Oregon, and he expressed the hope that by 1918 Philomath College would be standardized to meet the requirements of the United States Board of Education.

R. G. Sumner declared that if the people of the school districts would pay more attention to the election of school directors, the public schools would have a better class of teachers and there would be less infidelity taught in the public schools.

The conference endorsed the work of the Anti-Saloon League through the adoption of the report submitted by J. D. Niswonger, who recommended that the conference fight the proposed amendment to the prohibition law to permit the making of beer in Oregon. This recommendation was approved.

R. P. Hutton, of the Anti-Saloon League, made an address setting forth conditions in Oregon, and the plan to amend the prohibition law permitting beer to be made in Oregon. Hutton said he would prefer to make a fight for an amendment that would prohibit the importation of liquor of any sort into the state.

H. H. Neff, who reported on "The Home," said that, with fewer marriages and many divorces, birth control and childless homes and apartment-houses, the home was losing its place in the economy of the country. He made a plea for the old-fashioned home with father and mother and children and the family altar.

It is expected that the ministerial appointments may be made today. Sunday will be a day of services for the conference.

MOLE SKINS IN DEMAND

INQUIRIES COME FROM EAST FOR OREGON PELTS.

Chicago House Notifies Fish and Game Commission It Will Pay 10 to 12 Cents for Each Hide.

Possibilities for the Oregon farmers to make good money by the trapping and selling of mole skins have been opened up by the rapid increase in the price of furs.

The Oregon State Fish and Game Commission has received numerous communications from fur houses asking about prospecting for moles in this state. The Oregon mole is said to produce a skin of a high quality and offers an easy means of making money from 10 to 12 cents a skin.

The same firm tells the best method of preparing the skins for market. The method is as follows:

"Skin the moles open, that is, cut them down the belly similar to the method of removing the hide of a cow. Pack the skin on a board and stretch as nearly square as possible. Let dry in a cool, shady place."

NAMES ARE PASSED UPON

Geographic Board Rules on Some Spellings in Northwest.

Among the recent decisions of the United States Geographic Board are a number which cover the names of features in Oregon. Among the important ones are the following:

Chequamegon: creek, northern part of Wallowa County. (Not Chequamegon.)
Mowick: creek and park, eastern part of Douglas County. (Not Mowick.)
Fowwaka: precinct, village, Wallowa County. (Not Fowwaka.)
Weaver: mountain, eastern part of Douglas County. (Not Weaver.)
Anthony: lakes drained by Anthony Fork, northwest part of Baker County. (Not Anthony.)
Holan: creek, lake and mountain, southern part of Jackson County. (Not Holan.)
Howlock: mountain on summit of Cascade Range just north of Mount Thielsen, Klamath County. (Not Walker.) This designation does not refer to the isolated Walker Mountains east of Crescent.

Leah: river tributary to Wallowa River, near South Fork of Wallowa River. (Not South Fork of Wallowa River.)
Sycan: river, Klamath County. (Not Sak kan nor Sykan.)
Yamny: mountain, lake and Klamath counties. (Not Yam, Say.)
Clark: creek, tributary to Grande Ronde River, Union County. (Not Clark.)
Kirby: creek, western channel of Eagle Creek, west of Richland, Baker County. (Not Little Eagle.)

Among the recent important decisions for Washington is that of Cle Elum for the town and various other features in Western Kittitas County instead of Clealum; Abnatum for the town and other features southwest of North Yakima, instead of Abnatum; and Quinault for various features in Grays Harbor County, instead of Quenault and Quinault.

A delightful programme was given, Mrs. Mulholland sang, Miss Elsie was decorated in Scotch broom. Mrs. Robert Tate, a vice-president of the National Congress of Mothers, gave an interesting address. Mrs. Feenster sang and Miss Geraldine Peterson, a gifted little tot, played piano solos and sang. Grace Jacobson, accompanied by Louise Jacobson, played violin solos.

THE SANDMAN STORY

By Mrs. F. A. Walker.

The Poor Peacock. It was raining hard. The water splattered down the broken pipe and fell into the corner of the shed, and the speckled back of the big, fat hen. But Specs did not mind it a bit. Her feet were on a dry chip and the rain ran off her feathers just as if she were a duck.

Under her warm wing was a flock of yellow, fluffy balls that peeped and chirped and chirped and chirped. If the sky were clearing, but the mother gave them a gentle peck that sent them back under cover.

Back in a bit of old sack under an upturned barrel was a tiny creature, larger than the little chicks under the mother's wing, but a duller brown and thin of body. Scrawny, scragged and half fed, it dared not come under the wing of the hen that had hatched it, for all the room there was occupied by the yellow chicks, and the hen herself refused to mother the strange thing which came out of the big egg which had been placed among her own in the nest.

So out alone, half-starved it lived. Getting what it could to eat and sleeping alone in the barrel at night.

"Now, children, I want you to have nothing to do with that odd-looking creature that was hatched along with you," said the hen. "One must be careful of associates. There is no telling what it may turn out to be, and I want you to remember that you belong to the first families in the chicken yard."

So the fluffy yellow chicks strutted about when it cleared and turned up their tiny beaks at the ugly little thing that cowered over in the corner alone.

"And I want you also to take heed," called the hen over to the corner, "that you must keep out of the way of myself and my family. I am not responsible for the low eggs which may be placed under me when I am setting, but such an ungainly creature as you are could never be my child. In future we must be strangers. Never speak to me or to my children."

So with a loud cluck the hen strutted out into the open and there, in a tiny hole, was a young chick, a tiny girl was throwing to the corner. "You poor darling," exclaimed the chick, taking it up in her warm dress. "The bad hen has cast you off. Never mind, I will take care of you."

In ten minutes the weak fowl was in a dry box by the stove in a warm kitchen, and the little girl was feeding it, douching and cooking potatoes. How the half-starved thing ate! Then with a sigh of happiness—the first it had
