

MRS. PANKHURST IS FOR PREPARATION

Women's Part in War Is Described by ex-Militant English Suffragist.

MEN'S WORK DONE EASILY

Efforts for Equal Rights to Be Resumed When War Ends, Says Speaker—Plea Is Made for Conquered People.

"Patriotism in itself isn't enough; preparedness is necessary," said Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, of London, last night before a large audience in the Hotel Thayer, where she spoke on "Preparedness and Women's Part in the War."

Mrs. Pankhurst, formerly known only as a militant suffragist, is now devoting her time toward raising funds for the relief of the Serbians, Belgians and other allies of the Allies who are suffering as a result of the European war.

James B. Kerr introduced Mrs. Pankhurst. Her first words were a tribute to Lord Kitchener. Of him she said: "He was the idol of the people. He urged a high standard of morals for his soldiers. His example was always an inspiration. His death will be a severe blow to England, but it must cause some of the younger men to rise up, to achieve their highest standard and try to take his place."

"When the war broke out, we were having civil war all over the world," Mrs. Pankhurst said. She explained the manner in which the women dropped all their militancy and their fight for the ballot and the right to work in their country. She told of their marching 60,000 strong through the rain, on the rainiest day that London has ever seen, to demand the right to work in England.

"The war shall not end until Belgium and Serbia are free, and they were before the war," said Mrs. Pankhurst, and the audience applauded enthusiastically. Compulsory training along the line of military drilling and in the use of arms, she said, will be necessary to be of service to their country who are advocates of peace. Education in agricultural pursuits for boys and plenty of practical and systematic training for efficient manhood and womanhood, training that shall make men and women content in time of peace as well as in case of war were urged in all Mrs. Pankhurst's arguments.

"The closing questions were on a question 'What about suffrage after the war?' "We shall be there when the war is over, I think we will have the rights we want. The right to vote on the same qualification as is or may be given to the men."

"Our differences were always with a handful of politicians who were in power and didn't want to set out, I think it will be different when the war is over. English women have shown their loyalty. I do not think the men will forget."

Mrs. Pankhurst was entertained yesterday by Mrs. Solomon Hirsch and by Mrs. Walter J. Burns, president of the War Relief Society of Portland.

Thomas Dickson and Fred McIntyre during the recent Irish rebellion. The defendant is accused of murder. The prosecuting officer said the defendant took the three men from the guardroom with the remark: 'I'm going to shoot them, as I think it the right thing to do.' The guardroom orderly made a report regarding this to the adjutant general, who carried a message to Captain Bowen-Colthurst, but it is not known whether it reached him.

At all events, declared the prosecutor, the men were taken to the yard and shot by a firing party of seven men. Officers Colthurst had disobeyed orders on duty 72 hours at this time, and that Captain Bowen-Colthurst was extremely excited and did not act in his usual manner. Colthurst, after the shooting, he noticed a movement in Skerrington's body and told the captain of the latter that he had shot the man. Colthurst had shot the man. Another volley was fired into the body.

It was testified that Captain Bowen-Colthurst told the adjutant general, who was in command of the Portland barracks, that he had shot the men on duty. Bowen-Colthurst was in command of the barracks, that he had shot the men on duty. Bowen-Colthurst was in command of the barracks, that he had shot the men on duty.

BORDER AGAIN MENACED

General Bird, the chief witness for the defense, related how Captain Bowen-Colthurst had disobeyed orders during the Mons retreat and was suspended. Bowen-Colthurst's company was ordered to retreat, but he disobeyed Colthurst, gave the command to advance. This, said the witness, showed his incapacity.
