CONVENTION SIDELIGHTS

Veteran Delegate at Convention Says "Piano Knight" Episode Was Most Thrilling of Them All—Speaks Being President for the Four Days

The majority of the delegates in the Democratic National Convention believe that the candidate for the Presidency should be the man who has won the greatest number of popular votes and is the choice of the majority of the country.

Newspaper circulation figures were canvassed by the delegates, and the result seemed to be in favor of the candidate who received the greater number of popular votes.

A large number of delegates in attendance at the convention are of the opinion that the election of a President by the People is the best way to choose a President.

It was also decided that the party platform should be a fusion of views of all the party members.
