

SCENES ATTENDING MOBILIZATION OF OREGON NATIONAL GUARD YESTERDAY.

FIRST TROOPS FROM PORTLAND DEPART

Stirring War Scenes Enacted as Wives and Sweethearts Say Goodbye.

TRAIN HAS CLEAR TRACK

Companies B and F, Third Regiment, Oregon National Guard, Goes to Clackamas Camp--Salem Men Are at Range Also.

Stirring war scenes of '98 were re-enacted in Portland yesterday when the first troop train to leave for Portland men in Uncle Sam's uniform for 18 years pulled out of the Union Depot at 2 o'clock, bound for the mobilization camp at Clackamas.

Wives and sweethearts waved many a tearful good-bye as the soldier-filled cars straightened out for the run to the militia headquarters. Friends of men cheered the citizen soldiers and there were many envious glances from the men who did not go.

The entraining of the troops was a scene that brought vividly to mind the scenes of other days and the march to the station from the Armory of the khaki-clad guards. The bill, the flag and the band, stirred the city with patriotism.

One hundred and fifty men were aboard the first Clackamas-bound train. Two companies, B and F, of Portland, were on board.

Train Has Clear Track.

This special train was looked after with more than usual care by the Southern Pacific Company. A clear track was given it and special rolling stock was assembled promptly to carry the men and their equipment. Supplies for the militiamen were dispatched at the same time so that everything was ready on their arrival for tents to be pitched and the peaceful Clackamas country took on the appearance of an armed camp.

John M. Scott, general passenger agent for the Southern Pacific lines in Oregon, himself watch the dispatch of the train and nothing was left undone to handle the troop movement quickly and safely.

The first troop train will be followed by others today and by tonight it is expected that mobilization of the entire National Guard of the state will be complete.

Some of the tension on the waiting militiamen was relieved when the actual start was made for the mobilization camp at Clackamas. The men found waiting at the Armory for marching orders tedious and they were more than ready when the command came. Every detail had been arranged and nothing was overlooked when the boys in khaki stepped briskly forth from the Armory and began the short march to the station.

Administration of Park to Be in Hands of Forest Service--Land to Be Withdrawn From Oregon National Forest.

OREGONIAN NEWS BUREAU, Washington, June 20.—Senator Chamberlain today introduced the much-discussed bill proposing to create the Mount Hood National Park. The bill defines by metes and bounds the tracts to be carved out of the Oregon National Forest and converted to a National park. It further provides that administration of the park shall be left in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture—which means the Forest Service—and thus places the park in a class by itself, as all other National parks are under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Interior.

The bill is so framed as to insure the freest use of the park for recreation purposes, having in mind the preservation and protection of all natural scenic beauties of the area.

Representative Sinnott today introduced a bill authorizing the addition to the Whitman National Forest of all lands in T. 11 S., R. 24 E., T. 11 and 12, R. 35, T. 10, R. 35 1/2 and 11, R. 36, which are found, upon examination, to be suitable for timber growth and the protection of watersheds. The bill also provides that persons owning lands within this forest, which are valuable for forestry purposes, may relinquish the same to the Government and be given in exchange Government timber equal in value to the value of the land relinquished.

HOME GUARD DISCUSSED

LAWYERS AND BUSINESS MEN PROMISE TO ENLIST.

R. R. Dunlavy Sits Rotary Club With Declaration That They Are Challenged by Workers.

Business men of Portland are rallying to the movement which was launched some time ago by the lawyers, for the organization of a home guard of professional men, to train and fit themselves for defense service in case of invasion.

The Portland Rotary Club caught the enthusiasm of the movement at its meeting yesterday noon, and when R. R. Dunlavy, who has been active in the lawyer's organization, outlined the plan, a dozen men sprang to their feet instantly and declared their intention of enlisting.

"You hear it every day on the streets from the lips of laboring men, that the business and professional men will not enlist and that we are dependent for defense and for everything else upon the laboring class," said Mr. Dunlavy, vehemently. "And you hear, furthermore, that a large percentage of the laboring people are disloyal to the country and would not enlist to fight for its defense."

"At any rate it is a challenge to the business and professional men to show that they are willing to fit themselves for service in the defense of their country if need be."

The following men volunteered immediately for service in the home guard: Nelson G. Pike, president of the club; George D. Lee, Joseph Sandvall, B. M. Davison, J. L. Bowman, J. S. English, George W. Herrin, H. C. Huntington, F. C. Griffin, R. H. Atkinson, and those whose initials were not given: Farrell, O'Neil, Costello, Parks and Cook. General Charles F. Beebe praised the movement, and said that he was willing to serve as a private in the proposed organization.

General Charles F. Beebe was the speaker of the day, on the subject of "Patriotism and Preparedness."

At the close of the meeting the orchestra played the "Star-Spangled Banner" and a dozen balloons carrying American flags were released to the ceiling of the dining-room.
