

MEET BACK IN ANOTHER REGIMENT

With Arrangements Not Far
Along for Organization,
98 Applications In.

OFFICERS ARE ANNOUNCED

But Club Members Anxious to Get Into Mounted Organization—One Company of Firemen Desirous of Going—Policemen Join.

Men from all walks of life, firemen, policemen, ministers, laborers, lawyers, bankers, mechanics and business men called upon Colonel C. U. Gantenbein and his assistants yesterday to apply for admission to the proposed Oregon volunteer regiment which is to be organized in case President Wilson calls for volunteers.

By 6 o'clock last night 98 signed applications were on file in room 555, courthouse, and these did not include a large number that had been gathered at other sources in Portland.

Roy W. Keel, secretary to City Commissioner Baker, said last night that almost a full company of Portland firemen desire to join the volunteer regiment and a large number from the Portland police force were also anxious to join.

E. R. Crebb, of the Portland Hunt Club, advised Colonel Gantenbein last night that many members of that club are anxious to join the volunteer regiment, but would prefer, if possible, to go into a mounted organization. Mr. Crebb had conference with Colonel Gantenbein last night on the subject.

Recruiting Is General.
Volunteer recruits are being enlisted in various cities and towns of the state outside of Portland and tentative appointments have already been made of several captains to take charge of the organization in the respective communities.

"It is my purpose to have five or six companies organized in Portland and six or seven outside of Portland," said Colonel Gantenbein yesterday. "Several men of excellent military record have already been advised that they will be recommended for appointment as officers and company commanders. These men are being designated according to their known fitness, judged by their records as soldiers."

"The new military act, approved by the President on June 3, provides that the normal strength of a company shall be 100 and the maximum 150. In each company there are to be a captain, first and second lieutenants and 100 enlisted men, as follows, one first sergeant, one mess sergeant, one supply sergeant, six sergeants, 10 corporals, two cooks, two buglers, one mechanic, 13 privates of the first class and 54 privates."

New Appointments Made.
In addition to Colonel Gantenbein, Lieutenant-Colonel Finzer and Major Charles E. McConnell, the personnel of the field and staff officers, as proposed, was announced by Colonel Gantenbein yesterday as follows:

J. Francis Drake, the newly elected School Director, is to be captain of one of the Portland companies. Dr. Drake served in the Spanish-American war and was an officer in various companies of the first regiment, Oregon National Guard.

A. W. Orton, State Senator-elect, is to command another company with William E. Kinney and H. M. Dukes, both Spanish War veterans, as first and second lieutenants, respectively. Captain Orton commanded Troop A until a few months ago, and served as first lieutenant and Battalion Adjutant during the war.

Richard Deich, Deputy District Attorney, who is a veteran of the Philippine insurrection and a former member of the regular army, is to lead another Portland company. He is now enlistment headquarters at his office at the Municipal building, Second and Oak streets, yesterday for the signing up of a company of volunteers as a section of the regiment to be raised by Colonel Gantenbein. He is being assisted in the work by Police Captain Inskeep and City Detective Royle.

Newspaper Men Are Signed.
Fourteen newspaper men signed up yesterday while the plans for the new organization were being outlined, and it is expected that names will begin coming in in large numbers when the organization of the company is generally known.

Harry B. Critchlow, newspaper man, was the first to sign up with Deich for the new company. Two other newspaper men followed shortly after, Clifford C. Harrington and Paul Ryan. Others who signed up yesterday were H. F. Stanton, patrolman; E. A. Duerber, Harry Griffith, J. J. Saul, J. F. Hilton, B. Hunt, P. W. Evans, L. G. Duff, H. W. Bedding, Andy Vaughn and Ellsworth Adams.

Captain Inskeep will be first lieutenant and Detective Royle, second lieutenant of Captain Deich's company. All are men of considerable experience in military affairs.

Mr. Deich served in the Fourteenth United States Infantry for a number of years and at the time of the trouble in the Philippines served through the campaign as a member of the Second Oregon Volunteers.

Captain Inskeep saw considerable service in the California Naval Militia. Detective Royle saw several years service in the Colonial Guard of Canada and later in the National Guard in Portland.

Mr. Deich said last night that he expected to have the company organized by the first of July.

IF YOU WORRY, READ THIS

Worry never brought any good to anybody. But you say, "I don't worry because I want to. I worry because I can't help it. Or, 'I worry because I have so much to worry about.'"

We all have our troubles and worry, of course, makes matters worse. The patient generally recognizes this fact without being able to profit by it.

The doctor who could meet this nervous condition and cure it would be the most popular medical man alive. But he cannot do it because the form of nervous exhaustion known as neurasthenia, of which worry is a characteristic symptom, must be cured by the patient himself. That is why you should write today for the book "Diagnosis of the Nervous System" and read the chapter on "Neurasthenia." So many people have read it and written back, "This hits my case exactly. I am giving the treatment a trial and being benefited."

That Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., has had a lot of these books printed and will send you a copy free on request.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a non-alcoholic tonic, particularly suited for nervous, neurasthenic people. Your druggist sells them or they will be mailed postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50.

PASSENGERS AS DEATH HOVERS

Portland Man, Last to Leave
Bear, Declares That All
Were Calm.

ROWBOATS WANDER IN FOG

Melville W. Brown Vividly Nar-
rates Scenes Occurring After
Steamer Struck—Members of Crew Receive Praise.

The last passenger to leave the steamer Bear after she struck the beach two miles north of Cape Mendocino a fortnight ago was Melville W. Brown, of Portland. He did not continue his voyage on the Bear, but after a short visit in San Francisco he has returned to Portland. His story of the wreck and putting off of passengers in lifeboats is a strange intermingling of pathos and grim humor.

"A sense of humor is a great asset in a wreck," said Mr. Brown. "It may seem surprising, but a great many of the men and women chatted unconcernedly, and one little girl, as she went over the ship's side, made any of the boys cry. 'This is a great life, if you don't weaken'—and, honestly, we actually laughed. Maybe our laughter was the weak sort that emanates from hysteria, but it was infectious laughter, anyway. And after we were all packed over the ship's side, the women talk whose dog was reported to have overturned the boat from which two men were drowned. She handed out a package of candy. She was the first actress I've ever seen who resented publicity. She was quite furious about the story, and would talk to it with her dog, noodle, tucked under her arm to whoever would listen."

Whistle Is Sounded.
Mr. Brown was standing aft talking with the second steward when the steamer grounded.

"The expression on his face that first warned me that something was wrong," said young Brown. "To-day I realize that the expression was a realization that something serious had happened. Passengers and crew members were all looking at each other. Life preservers, and I hastened to outfit myself with one. It took a nearby steward to tell me that I had it on my back, and with his help I reversed it. Boats were lowered from the upper deck and with other men I helped in loading them with women and children. At no time did we hear the greatest calmness and quiet obedience of orders prevailed. Boat after boat was lowered until only a few male passengers and members of the crew remained on board."

"I had spent some time in getting blankets from the storeroom to throw into the boats as they were lowered, and a friend of mine, a chap named Parker, I had met on the boat, had seen a seat for me in the last boat to leave. Someone mentioned jewelry, and I remembered my watch and money in my stateroom. Without stopping to see if there was more than one, I dashed down the deck, climbed a flight of stairs and hurried back to get in my reserved seat. But the boat was lowered away, and in the seat Parker had reserved for me sat the boat's cook, who was killed when the boat capsized."

Brown Leaps In Boat.
"By a strange coincidence, Parker and the dead cook went down in the same boat. After the boat with Parker in it was lowered, I started to get into another one, when an officer told me it already held the passenger limit. I remembered there were boats on the other side and dashed over there to find the last crew member entering it. I gave one leap and jumped in it, before anyone could stop me. A loud public and when the first spray struck me I realized I was in a workboat, which is much smaller than the others. The head and the sea, and the lights of the Bear soon disappeared."

"We all rowed our best, with nothing but dense black fog enveloping us and the bitter cold increasing. Far away we could hear the dreary boom of a siren siren, which sounded somewhere in the fog. The fog was so thick that it seemed to give us chase. Five long hours elapsed before any signs of Blunt Reef light-house appeared, and when we saw it dimly twinkling I began to realize that no light I had ever seen was so welcome. We had rowed out of our course once or twice, circling now to the left now to the right, with the tide. And how that Swedish ship's carpenter in charge did make the rowing seem to human nature in the open than ever before in my life during that night's ride on the sea."

Passengers Well Cared For.
When we landed at the light-house I was almost paralyzed from my waist down but the good care we were given there straightened me out. The ship's company were principally to us, the best of everything at no price wherever we were and excellent care taken of us. I got enough ideas from scenes aboard ship and after the rescue to provide plots for a dozen scenarios."

Mr. Brown is devoting his time to writing. He has had several sketches produced in vaudeville and articles printed in magazines. He is the son of the late Captain J. M. Brown, and Mrs. Brown and resides with his mother at the Hotel Nantonia.

VISITOR SCORES WILSON

Political Carpenters Sent to Fill
Offices in Honolulu.

"No man can make the average resident of Honolulu believe that President Wilson is the man of high principles and integrity that he is said to be. After his deliberate turning over of the Hawaiian Islands to a crowd of unscrupulous carpetbaggers, solely for political reasons."

B. Lymer, of Honolulu, for seven years a resident of the islands, where he has served as deputy attorney-general and judge, besides being in private practice for some time. Judge Lymer is in Portland on his way back to Honolulu after a trip to Washington.

No other President in history has made the Hawaiian Islands the barometer of political expediency as has President Wilson. The majority of people in the islands are Republicans and naturally the majority of able men from whom appointments could be made for positions of public service were Republicans.

"Politics has not figured in appointments in previous years and it remained only for Wilson to turn out all of the experienced men and replace them with men of his own party, regardless of their service and efficiency."

"The bench is the part I was in the best position to observe in the changes made by President Wilson."

"Here Wilson made a complete clean-out of the Republican incumbents, regardless of every thing, and there not being Democrats enough in the islands to fill the places, he filled the bench with carpetbaggers from Tennessee and Georgia, men who know little about the law in general and less about the law as applied to the islands, and who have neither character nor ability."

"It is natural that the people in the Hawaiian islands are eager to see Hughes elected, and that many of our strong men are now in the States assisting in the Hughes campaign."

Wilson's narrow political dealings with regard to appointments and dismissals of officials and the La Pollette seamen's bill, which has wiped the Pacific Mail off the ocean, have been the two worst blows that we have suffered in many a year. We hope to see the seamen's act repealed."

Judge Lymer said that the residents of the Hawaiian islands are almost wholly of the opinion that the United States is faced by the real danger of the Japanese citizens of the islands and said that he believed that Japan's ambition to rule the Orient and not the Pacific Coast.

Judge Lymer while here visited Dr. and Mrs. F. E. Moore, who are his close personal friends. Mrs. Lymer accompanied him on his trip to the States. They will leave today for San Francisco.

PASSENGERS AS DEATH HOVERS

Portland Man, Last to Leave
Bear, Declares That All
Were Calm.

ROWBOATS WANDER IN FOG

Melville W. Brown Vividly Nar-
rates Scenes Occurring After
Steamer Struck—Members of Crew Receive Praise.

The last passenger to leave the steamer Bear after she struck the beach two miles north of Cape Mendocino a fortnight ago was Melville W. Brown, of Portland. He did not continue his voyage on the Bear, but after a short visit in San Francisco he has returned to Portland. His story of the wreck and putting off of passengers in lifeboats is a strange intermingling of pathos and grim humor.

"A sense of humor is a great asset in a wreck," said Mr. Brown. "It may seem surprising, but a great many of the men and women chatted unconcernedly, and one little girl, as she went over the ship's side, made any of the boys cry. 'This is a great life, if you don't weaken'—and, honestly, we actually laughed. Maybe our laughter was the weak sort that emanates from hysteria, but it was infectious laughter, anyway. And after we were all packed over the ship's side, the women talk whose dog was reported to have overturned the boat from which two men were drowned. She handed out a package of candy. She was the first actress I've ever seen who resented publicity. She was quite furious about the story, and would talk to it with her dog, noodle, tucked under her arm to whoever would listen."

Whistle Is Sounded.
Mr. Brown was standing aft talking with the second steward when the steamer grounded.

"The expression on his face that first warned me that something was wrong," said young Brown. "To-day I realize that the expression was a realization that something serious had happened. Passengers and crew members were all looking at each other. Life preservers, and I hastened to outfit myself with one. It took a nearby steward to tell me that I had it on my back, and with his help I reversed it. Boats were lowered from the upper deck and with other men I helped in loading them with women and children. At no time did we hear the greatest calmness and quiet obedience of orders prevailed. Boat after boat was lowered until only a few male passengers and members of the crew remained on board."

"I had spent some time in getting blankets from the storeroom to throw into the boats as they were lowered, and a friend of mine, a chap named Parker, I had met on the boat, had seen a seat for me in the last boat to leave. Someone mentioned jewelry, and I remembered my watch and money in my stateroom. Without stopping to see if there was more than one, I dashed down the deck, climbed a flight of stairs and hurried back to get in my reserved seat. But the boat was lowered away, and in the seat Parker had reserved for me sat the boat's cook, who was killed when the boat capsized."

Brown Leaps In Boat.
"By a strange coincidence, Parker and the dead cook went down in the same boat. After the boat with Parker in it was lowered, I started to get into another one, when an officer told me it already held the passenger limit. I remembered there were boats on the other side and dashed over there to find the last crew member entering it. I gave one leap and jumped in it, before anyone could stop me. A loud public and when the first spray struck me I realized I was in a workboat, which is much smaller than the others. The head and the sea, and the lights of the Bear soon disappeared."

"We all rowed our best, with nothing but dense black fog enveloping us and the bitter cold increasing. Far away we could hear the dreary boom of a siren siren, which sounded somewhere in the fog. The fog was so thick that it seemed to give us chase. Five long hours elapsed before any signs of Blunt Reef light-house appeared, and when we saw it dimly twinkling I began to realize that no light I had ever seen was so welcome. We had rowed out of our course once or twice, circling now to the left now to the right, with the tide. And how that Swedish ship's carpenter in charge did make the rowing seem to human nature in the open than ever before in my life during that night's ride on the sea."

Passengers Well Cared For.
When we landed at the light-house I was almost paralyzed from my waist down but the good care we were given there straightened me out. The ship's company were principally to us, the best of everything at no price wherever we were and excellent care taken of us. I got enough ideas from scenes aboard ship and after the rescue to provide plots for a dozen scenarios."

Mr. Brown is devoting his time to writing. He has had several sketches produced in vaudeville and articles printed in magazines. He is the son of the late Captain J. M. Brown, and Mrs. Brown and resides with his mother at the Hotel Nantonia.

VISITOR SCORES WILSON

Political Carpenters Sent to Fill
Offices in Honolulu.

"No man can make the average resident of Honolulu believe that President Wilson is the man of high principles and integrity that he is said to be. After his deliberate turning over of the Hawaiian Islands to a crowd of unscrupulous carpetbaggers, solely for political reasons."

B. Lymer, of Honolulu, for seven years a resident of the islands, where he has served as deputy attorney-general and judge, besides being in private practice for some time. Judge Lymer is in Portland on his way back to Honolulu after a trip to Washington.

No other President in history has made the Hawaiian Islands the barometer of political expediency as has President Wilson. The majority of people in the islands are Republicans and naturally the majority of able men from whom appointments could be made for positions of public service were Republicans.

"Politics has not figured in appointments in previous years and it remained only for Wilson to turn out all of the experienced men and replace them with men of his own party, regardless of their service and efficiency."

"The bench is the part I was in the best position to observe in the changes made by President Wilson."

"Here Wilson made a complete clean-out of the Republican incumbents, regardless of every thing, and there not being Democrats enough in the islands to fill the places, he filled the bench with carpetbaggers from Tennessee and Georgia, men who know little about the law in general and less about the law as applied to the islands, and who have neither character nor ability."

"It is natural that the people in the Hawaiian islands are eager to see Hughes elected, and that many of our strong men are now in the States assisting in the Hughes campaign."

Wilson's narrow political dealings with regard to appointments and dismissals of officials and the La Pollette seamen's bill, which has wiped the Pacific Mail off the ocean, have been the two worst blows that we have suffered in many a year. We hope to see the seamen's act repealed."

Judge Lymer said that the residents of the Hawaiian islands are almost wholly of the opinion that the United States is faced by the real danger of the Japanese citizens of the islands and said that he believed that Japan's ambition to rule the Orient and not the Pacific Coast.

Judge Lymer while here visited Dr. and Mrs. F. E. Moore, who are his close personal friends. Mrs. Lymer accompanied him on his trip to the States. They will leave today for San Francisco.

PASSENGERS AS DEATH HOVERS

Portland Man, Last to Leave
Bear, Declares That All
Were Calm.

ROWBOATS WANDER IN FOG

Melville W. Brown Vividly Nar-
rates Scenes Occurring After
Steamer Struck—Members of Crew Receive Praise.

The last passenger to leave the steamer Bear after she struck the beach two miles north of Cape Mendocino a fortnight ago was Melville W. Brown, of Portland. He did not continue his voyage on the Bear, but after a short visit in San Francisco he has returned to Portland. His story of the wreck and putting off of passengers in lifeboats is a strange intermingling of pathos and grim humor.

"A sense of humor is a great asset in a wreck," said Mr. Brown. "It may seem surprising, but a great many of the men and women chatted unconcernedly, and one little girl, as she went over the ship's side, made any of the boys cry. 'This is a great life, if you don't weaken'—and, honestly, we actually laughed. Maybe our laughter was the weak sort that emanates from hysteria, but it was infectious laughter, anyway. And after we were all packed over the ship's side, the women talk whose dog was reported to have overturned the boat from which two men were drowned. She handed out a package of candy. She was the first actress I've ever seen who resented publicity. She was quite furious about the story, and would talk to it with her dog, noodle, tucked under her arm to whoever would listen."

Whistle Is Sounded.
Mr. Brown was standing aft talking with the second steward when the steamer grounded.

"The expression on his face that first warned me that something was wrong," said young Brown. "To-day I realize that the expression was a realization that something serious had happened. Passengers and crew members were all looking at each other. Life preservers, and I hastened to outfit myself with one. It took a nearby steward to tell me that I had it on my back, and with his help I reversed it. Boats were lowered from the upper deck and with other men I helped in loading them with women and children. At no time did we hear the greatest calmness and quiet obedience of orders prevailed. Boat after boat was lowered until only a few male passengers and members of the crew remained on board."

"I had spent some time in getting blankets from the storeroom to throw into the boats as they were lowered, and a friend of mine, a chap named Parker, I had met on the boat, had seen a seat for me in the last boat to leave. Someone mentioned jewelry, and I remembered my watch and money in my stateroom. Without stopping to see if there was more than one, I dashed down the deck, climbed a flight of stairs and hurried back to get in my reserved seat. But the boat was lowered away, and in the seat Parker had reserved for me sat the boat's cook, who was killed when the boat capsized."

Brown Leaps In Boat.
"By a strange coincidence, Parker and the dead cook went down in the same boat. After the boat with Parker in it was lowered, I started to get into another one, when an officer told me it already held the passenger limit. I remembered there were boats on the other side and dashed over there to find the last crew member entering it. I gave one leap and jumped in it, before anyone could stop me. A loud public and when the first spray struck me I realized I was in a workboat, which is much smaller than the others. The head and the sea, and the lights of the Bear soon disappeared."

"We all rowed our best, with nothing but dense black fog enveloping us and the bitter cold increasing. Far away we could hear the dreary boom of a siren siren, which sounded somewhere in the fog. The fog was so thick that it seemed to give us chase. Five long hours elapsed before any signs of Blunt Reef light-house appeared, and when we saw it dimly twinkling I began to realize that no light I had ever seen was so welcome. We had rowed out of our course once or twice, circling now to the left now to the right, with the tide. And how that Swedish ship's carpenter in charge did make the rowing seem to human nature in the open than ever before in my life during that night's ride on the sea."

Passengers Well Cared For.
When we landed at the light-house I was almost paralyzed from my waist down but the good care we were given there straightened me out. The ship's company were principally to us, the best of everything at no price wherever we were and excellent care taken of us. I got enough ideas from scenes aboard ship and after the rescue to provide plots for a dozen scenarios."

Mr. Brown is devoting his time to writing. He has had several sketches produced in vaudeville and articles printed in magazines. He is the son of the late Captain J. M. Brown, and Mrs. Brown and resides with his mother at the Hotel Nantonia.

VISITOR SCORES WILSON

Political Carpenters Sent to Fill
Offices in Honolulu.

"No man can make the average resident of Honolulu believe that President Wilson is the man of high principles and integrity that he is said to be. After his deliberate turning over of the Hawaiian Islands to a crowd of unscrupulous carpetbaggers, solely for political reasons."

B. Lymer, of Honolulu, for seven years a resident of the islands, where he has served as deputy attorney-general and judge, besides being in private practice for some time. Judge Lymer is in Portland on his way back to Honolulu after a trip to Washington.

No other President in history has made the Hawaiian Islands the barometer of political expediency as has President Wilson. The majority of people in the islands are Republicans and naturally the majority of able men from whom appointments could be made for positions of public service were Republicans.

"Politics has not figured in appointments in previous years and it remained only for Wilson to turn out all of the experienced men and replace them with men of his own party, regardless of their service and efficiency."

"The bench is the part I was in the best position to observe in the changes made by President Wilson."

"Here Wilson made a complete clean-out of the Republican incumbents, regardless of every thing, and there not being Democrats enough in the islands to fill the places, he filled the bench with carpetbaggers from Tennessee and Georgia, men who know little about the law in general and less about the law as applied to the islands, and who have neither character nor ability."

"It is natural that the people in the Hawaiian islands are eager to see Hughes elected, and that many of our strong men are now in the States assisting in the Hughes campaign."

Wilson's narrow political dealings with regard to appointments and dismissals of officials and the La Pollette seamen's bill, which has wiped the Pacific Mail off the ocean, have been the two worst blows that we have suffered in many a year. We hope to see the seamen's act repealed."

Judge Lymer said that the residents of the Hawaiian islands are almost wholly of the opinion that the United States is faced by the real danger of the Japanese citizens of the islands and said that he believed that Japan's ambition to rule the Orient and not the Pacific Coast.

Judge Lymer while here visited Dr. and Mrs. F. E. Moore, who are his close personal friends. Mrs. Lymer accompanied him on his trip to the States. They will leave today for San Francisco.

PASSENGERS AS DEATH HOVERS

Portland Man, Last to Leave
Bear, Declares That All
Were Calm.

ROWBOATS WANDER IN FOG

Melville W. Brown Vividly Nar-
rates Scenes Occurring After
Steamer Struck—Members of Crew Receive Praise.

The last passenger to leave the steamer Bear after she struck the beach two miles north of Cape Mendocino a fortnight ago was Melville W. Brown, of Portland. He did not continue his voyage on the Bear, but after a short visit in San Francisco he has returned to Portland. His story of the wreck and putting off of passengers in lifeboats is a strange intermingling of pathos and grim humor.

"A sense of humor is a great asset in a wreck," said Mr. Brown. "It may seem surprising, but a great many of the men and women chatted unconcernedly, and one little girl, as she went over the ship's side, made any of the boys cry. 'This is a great life, if you don't weaken'—and, honestly, we actually laughed. Maybe our laughter was the weak sort that emanates from hysteria, but it was infectious laughter, anyway. And after we were all packed over the ship's side, the women talk whose dog was reported to have overturned the boat from which two men were drowned. She handed out a package of candy. She was the first actress I've ever seen who resented publicity. She was quite furious about the story, and would talk to it with her dog, noodle, tucked under her arm to whoever would listen."

Whistle Is Sounded.
Mr. Brown was standing aft talking with the second steward when the steamer grounded.

"The expression on his face that first warned me that something was wrong," said young Brown. "To-day I realize that the expression was a realization that something serious had happened. Passengers and crew members were all looking at each other. Life preservers, and I hastened to outfit myself with one. It took a nearby steward to tell me that I had it on my back, and with his help I reversed it. Boats were lowered from the upper deck and with other men I helped in loading them with women and children. At no time did we hear the greatest calmness and quiet obedience of orders prevailed. Boat after boat was lowered until only a few male passengers and members of the crew remained on board."

"I had spent some time in getting blankets from the storeroom to throw into the boats as they were lowered, and a friend of mine, a chap named Parker, I had met on the boat, had seen a seat for me in the last boat to leave. Someone mentioned jewelry, and I remembered my watch and money in my stateroom. Without stopping to see if there was more than one, I dashed down the deck, climbed a flight of stairs and hurried back to get in my reserved seat. But the boat was lowered away, and in the seat Parker had reserved for me sat the boat's cook, who was killed when the boat capsized."

Brown Leaps In Boat.
"By a strange coincidence, Parker and the dead cook went down in the same boat. After the boat with Parker in it was lowered, I started to get into another one, when an officer told me it already held the passenger limit. I remembered there were boats on the other side and dashed over there to find the last crew member entering it. I gave one leap and jumped in it, before anyone could stop me. A loud public and when the first spray struck me I realized I was in a workboat, which is much smaller than the others. The head and the sea, and the lights of the Bear soon disappeared."

"We all rowed our best, with nothing but dense black fog enveloping us and the bitter cold increasing. Far away we could hear the dreary boom of a siren siren, which sounded somewhere in the fog. The fog was so thick that it seemed to give us chase. Five long hours elapsed before any signs of Blunt Reef light-house appeared, and when we saw it dimly twinkling I began to realize that no light I had ever seen was so welcome. We had rowed out of our course once or twice, circling now to the left now to the right, with the tide. And how that Swedish ship's carpenter in charge did make the rowing seem to human nature in the open than ever before in my life during that night's ride on the sea."

Passengers Well Cared For.
When we landed at the light-house I was almost paralyzed from my waist down but the good care we were given there straightened me out. The ship's company were principally to us, the best of everything at no price wherever we were and excellent care taken of us. I got enough ideas from scenes aboard ship and after the rescue to provide plots for a dozen scenarios."

Mr. Brown is devoting his time to writing. He has had several sketches produced in vaudeville and articles printed in magazines. He is the son of the late Captain J. M. Brown, and Mrs. Brown and resides with his mother at the Hotel Nantonia.

VISITOR SCORES WILSON

Political Carpenters Sent to Fill
Offices in Honolulu.

"No man can make the average resident of Honolulu believe that President Wilson is the man of high principles and integrity that he is said to be. After his deliberate turning over of the Hawaiian Islands to a crowd of unscrupulous carpetbaggers, solely for political reasons."

B. Lymer, of Honolulu, for seven years a resident of the islands, where he has served as deputy attorney-general and judge, besides being in private practice for some time. Judge Lymer is in Portland on his way back to Honolulu after a trip to Washington.

No other President in history has made the Hawaiian Islands the barometer of political expediency as has President Wilson. The majority of people in the islands are Republicans and naturally the majority of able men from whom appointments could be made for positions of public service were Republicans.

"Politics has not figured in appointments in previous years and it remained only for Wilson to turn out all of the experienced men and replace them with men of his own party, regardless of their service and efficiency."

"The bench is the part I was in the best position to observe in the changes made by President Wilson."

"Here Wilson made a complete clean-out of the Republican incumbents, regardless of every thing, and there not being Democrats enough in the islands to fill the places, he filled the bench with carpetbaggers from Tennessee and Georgia, men who know little about the law in general and less about the law as applied to the islands, and who have neither character nor ability."

"It is natural that the people in the Hawaiian islands are eager to see Hughes elected, and that many of our strong men are now in the States assisting in the Hughes campaign."

Wilson's narrow political dealings with regard to appointments and dismissals of officials and the La Pollette seamen's bill, which has wiped the Pacific Mail off the ocean, have been the two worst blows that we have suffered in many a year. We hope to see the seamen's act repealed."

Judge Lymer said that the residents of the Hawaiian islands are almost wholly of the opinion that the United States is faced by the real danger of the Japanese citizens of the islands and said that he believed that Japan's ambition to rule the Orient and not the Pacific Coast.