POE'S DEATH FELT

Indiana Society to Hold Memorial for J. Whitcomb Riley. Stories are Related of Fondness for Children—Late Bard Said to Have Won Hearts of All Hoosiers.

FRIEND TELLS OF TRAITS

A memorial service in honor of James Whitcomb Riley, whose death was announced Sunday, is being arranged by the Indiana Society. Although plans of a definite nature have been adopted, the next meeting of the society is to be held the fourth Monday in August, will be devoted to the poet, and expressions of sentiment will be delivered in talks by various members familiar with the poet.

CHARITY AFFAIR IS AIDED

"I first knew James Whitcomb Riley back in 1891 when he and Shirley Douglas were touring together. We were about to give some amateur theatricals for charity, and the whole performance fell through at the last moment. We heard that Riley and Douglas were going to be in Elmira, and so we telegraphed them for help. They offered their services, so we changed the show to a joint performance of the two celebrities. Riley recited his humorous poetry, and Douglas recited his unwritten stories. We had no occasion to regret the theatricals we had abandoned.

POET WINS CHILDREN

"He always was a child himself, and most easily approached by children. Put him in a mixed crowd, and he would soon attract all the children about him. Then he would begin to really shine. When he met a child he would be just as two children. He would get acquainted just as a strange child does. For a while he would look exactly like a frog, and then we knew why he wore them. He gave a book of his poems to two little children, and when they asked him to write his name in the book, he took up his pen and wrote above his autograph: Hall, Eugene and Geraldine. Bestest kids I've ever seen. Are Eugene and Geraldine.
