

VEDA THE VAMPIRE
MUSIC BY THE ORCHESTRAS
Young Society Steals From Church to See Itself Before Public on Screen.

FILM ON AT MAJESTIC
Movie Parody by Prominent People of Portland Is Exhibited for Benefit of Charity—Local Interest Keen.

Veda, the Vampire, gracefully stole into and interrupted the orisons of society yesterday morning. Veda began to make her first public appearance on the screen at the Majestic Theater shortly after 11 o'clock, and how should young society keep its eyes on its breviary or lend its ears to the preacher when young society knew that it was doing a shadow dance to the pleasing of the masses down in the moving-picture theater.

So, if the truth must be known, many a pretty bud and many a gallant young clubman stole away from the church and joined the crowd that witnessed the first public presentation of the first society motion picture that has been put on in Portland. Oh Veda, Veda, your sins upon the film were manifold, but how shall it be forgiven you when you come out from the film and put pitfalls before young men and women when it is Sunday morning and the world is so fair to all?

Vampirism Is for Charity. Perhaps the fact that the vampire's crimes were performed for the sake of sweet charity, and perhaps the fact that young men traitor to the people, when they know that they are appearing in the movies, feel restless until they can get away to seeing the vampire, may account for the disturbance of the calm channels of Sunday morning worship yesterday.

For "Veda, the Vampire" is to turn back the film to the full of features of local interest than the vespers heroine is full of wiles, which is saying a great deal. Veda, the Vampire, leads Leland Smith, who acts the role of the demoted bridegroom, on a wild chase through the streets of Portland; she makes a rendezvous with the vampire, as Paul Pikea, the erring husband, by one of the well-known cigar stores of this city. Lloyd Smith shoves Barbara Bartlett, as his wife, over the cliff into the pool at the foot of the Multnomah Falls; and the other episodes of the film are full of local interest.

Young Society Folk Filmed. Besides the local interest that attaches to the scenes, there is the local appeal of a cast made up entirely from the cream of society's younger set. It is the Blue Book gone on a madcap summer night's dream and stepped through the portals of the night in moonlight and sunlight, and when can't you hope again to see local aristocracy hampered by the camera? Of course, Society is quite as human as society with a low-cut dress, and got a lot of fun out of posing for the movies. Miss Helen Ladd, who was the bride in the film play, sent in a long-distance telephone call from the way from Seaview Saturday, to find out how the thing was going.

Miss Ladd, as the plot unfolds, in the first sufferer from the wiles of Veda. Shirley Eastham, as the little girl of Mr. and Mrs. Pikea, who gets the scarlet fever, and Dennis Clark is so lonely as the lonely bachelor that one is almost constrained to weep for him. A little episode that is especially pretty is the dancing of Mildred Keats, in the scene of the wedding breakfast early in the film.

Dobson Tumble Is Real. Tom Dobson and Aaron Frank cover themselves with glory in their pursuit of the train, which carries the deserted bride, and it is explained by those who know that the reason for the life-like quality of the tumble Dobson takes as he tumbles into the water, is that he didn't intend to fall. But it makes a good picture, anyhow.

And Veda is going to sail away in a short time, for Veda for Veda was impersonated by Ford Tarpley, who wrote the scenario and directed the production and furnished all the vampire, too. In feminine costume he produces quite the tigerish impression and makes a distinct parody in appearance to a well-known professional vampire movie actress whose name he parodies in the cast.

YOUNG FISHER DROWNED

WILLIAM H. SCHMITZ VICTIM AT VANCOUVER LAKE.

Companions Say Victim Was in Water Only Two Minutes and Body Worked on Two Hours.

VANCOUVER, Wash., Aug. 13.—(Special.)—Slipping from a rolling log into Vancouver Lake, near Pelida, five miles north of this city, shortly after noon today, William H. Schmitz, 18 years old, was drowned, though he was in the water only two minutes and every attempt was made to resuscitate him. With his younger brother, Fred, Charles Reed and Howard Marble, Schmitz went fishing in Vancouver Lake. They walked out on the Weyerhaeuser log boom in the lake. Three of them were on a log, which started to roll, throwing Marble into the water first, the drowned youth next and Reed last. Schmitz was not able to swim and the other boys went to his rescue. The prostrate youth was taken to the bank, the water worked out of his lungs and efforts made to revive him. Dr. M. U. Lieser, of Vancouver, was summoned after one of the boys ran two miles to a telephone. Dr. Lieser made the run to the lake in 20 minutes, taking a motorboat. Two hours' work failed to revive the young man. Schmitz was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Schmitz, who reside on the main street, near Burnt Bridge Creek, two miles north of this city.

PORTLAND WRITER VISITS

ANNE SHANNON MONROE TO BE HERE FOR TEN DAYS.

Novelist Whose Latest Work, "Happy Valley," Story of Central Oregon, Is Success, to Arrive Today.

Anne Shannon Monroe, a Portland author and member of the Grub Street Club, who has arrived, will return to Portland today for a 10-days' visit with her sister, Miss Margaret Monroe, 208 Sixth street. Miss Monroe's latest success is "Happy Valley," a romantic story of Central Oregon, idealizing some of its prominent men and putting into literature a few recognizable characters in "Bullpitt," Old Man Clark, John Regan and Vader, the old innkeeper, all characters assimilated or being assimilated by Oregon. Miss Monroe's novel, according to library and bookshop reports, has taken hold, and promises to run into an extra edition. It is peculiarly interesting among other reasons for the fact that it is told in the first person from a masculine viewpoint.

BLIND OSTEOPATH'S LIFE RECOVERING

Situation Brightened Since Woman Took Poison, Fearing to Become Burden.

MAN'S SISTER SENDS FUNDS

Story of How Student, Without Vision, Worked Through College, Secured Diploma, Passed in Oregon, Is Epic.

"By tomorrow she'll be through it all right," said Dr. C. F. Scheller yesterday. The blind physician laughed contentedly. "She" is no ordinary patient to the young osteopath. She is his wife, and they were married last March. On Friday forenoon Mrs. Scheller drank acutely because she feared that she was a burden to the career of her blind husband, who was without funds and had not yet received his license to practice in Oregon. The dying woman was taken to Good Samaritan Hospital, and the flicker of life tended until it became certain that she would recover. Now Dr. Scheller is waiting for her at their rooms, 48 Yamhill street.

DRIVER MAY BE HEIR

Pythian Brings Word That Fortune Awaits Wm. Temple.

RELATIONSHIP IS INVOLVED

Portland Man and His Pretty Wife in Modest Cottage Home, Surrounded by Flowers, Calmly Await Possible Big Luck.

George William Temple, 198 Skidmore street, driver for the city in the street department, today probably is heir to a portion of a large estate in Delaware, but tonight he will take his place on the box of a street-flushing machine. Fortune is a fickle mistress, he says, and until he is called upon to prove up his identity he will hold fast to his job.

STUDENTS MAKE BARGAIN

Textbooks were closed mysteries to him, yet he entered the college with a determination to win. He is a graduate. From his scant funds he apportioned sufficient to pay the room and board of another student, who lacked money but had the gift of vision.

Scheller and this fellow student struck the bargain. For room and board, today probably is heir to a portion of a large estate in Delaware, but tonight he will take his place on the box of a street-flushing machine. Fortune is a fickle mistress, he says, and until he is called upon to prove up his identity he will hold fast to his job.
