Malvern's Comiques, Musicians, Dancers and Ventriloquists Included Among Amusers,

A rather big week is before the Hippodrome, the Kipling photopiay, "The Light That Falled," to be shown Mon-day, Tuesday and Wednesday, with election returns Tuesday night.

A wild, breezy pantomime noveity, Malvern's Comiques, headlines the bill that began yesterday, playing to capacity houses all day. They are slap-stick, but not objectionably so, for it's stick, but not objectionably so, for it's like being next to the camera and watching the filming of a big Reystoner. Six merry, clownish folk tumble about, race through doors, break furniture and implements over each other and have a very funny time that pleases the audience and makes the kiddles scream with laughter.

Mitchell & Mitch, with banjos and the merriest, liveliest of tunes, skipping feet and smilling faces, win the audience completely. One is the type that brings for the comments, "cute," and "classy," and the other is the blackest of funny blackface comedians. He's full of tune and laughs and sprinkles his fun in the crowd.

A quartette of singers, two men and two women, in an old farmstead setting, sing the old, almost forgotten songs and please with novelty of a combination of romance, song and play. Singing and dancig are the special-ties of Hartz and Evans, who sing well and dance better. The girl is a clever, attractive maiden, with dashing clothes and an ability to impersonate.

Another well-liked act is by McClure and Dolly, equilibrists and jugglers, whose act is a good one.

Frank Rogers, with his wife and colored dummles, has heaps of fun and wins honors as a finished ventriloquist.
