RUTH GATES HAS TWO FADS— READING BOOKS AND DANCING

Horseback Riding, Too, Comes in For Much Attention When She Has Time Between Shows to Indulge This Outdoor Whim.

UTH GATES and I were having a chat yesterday in her dressingroom while she was carefully placing several perfectly nice beads on her up-curling lastes. A colored maid held the little pan of hot, sizzling black liquid while the attractive young actress deftly dobbed a toothpick into the mess and onto her lashes. And while the fascinating process processed we talked of roles and clothes and horses and war and washing one's hair and bables and books. And when we got around to the last subject she told me a funny story. At least I think it's runny. Miss Gates says it's an old one, but some of the oldest get laughs somemit some of the oldest get laughs somees, and this one got one from me. fiss Gates is tremendously keen out reading. Has O. Henry en-Miss Gates, Has O. Henry en-about reading. Has O. Henry en-shrined in her dressing-room—and a set of Byron close by—and one of Mrs. Browning—and a flock of magazines. Browning—and a newspaper for breakfast She has a newspaper for breakfast every morning, and all this makes her and me belong to the same lodge—so we talked about it. Then she told me the story I'm telling you about. It seems a grand dame of the chorus was going to observe one of her birthdays and a bevy of her colleagues of the and a bevy of her colleagues of the front row were planning to give her a present. They thought of various things to give her—and finally one little fairy said, "Oh, I know, let's give her a book—that's always acceptable."

'Oh, no." chorused a chorus, "she's already got a book."

and dance my head and heels off after the show at night."

As a mere matter of information to several who have asked, this is Miss Gates' initial visit to Portland. She played in stock in Omaha one season. She calls Omaha West, and I almost wept with joy. Everybody else out here calls Omaha and Billings, Montana, "back East," just because it happens to be East of us. "Why don't people out here speak of their destination as, say, 'I'm going to Pocatello, Idaho,' instead of vaguely referring to any trip 10 miles in that direction as I'm going East'? It's queer to me, for out here La Grande, Oregon, or Hackensack, New Jersey, are equally back East," And in answer to another query—put kindly by a cat soul I know—Miss Gates' hair is all her own—she has gobs of it, and it's a gorgeous Lesile Carterish red. Her eyes are topax brown, and she's mighty sweet to know. She's got a beau in the trenches and she wears a medal he won. It looks like a cross betweeen a Carnegie hero plate and an Elk's poster, and is so large she can use it for a chest protector when cold weather comes.

"So I suppose the beau in the weather comes. "So I suppose the beau in the trenches will take up all your spare thoughts this season?" I surmised questioningly, "Well, I should remark not," said Miss Gates. "I'm perfectly crazy about the good-looking men in Portland." land. The trenches are far, far away,
