WOMEN'S SHOW COMING

POTASH & PERLMUTTER WILL BE AT BAKER NEXT WEEK.

Alcazar Players Promise Excellent Performance of Drama From Montague Glass' Stories.

Ladies, do you know that the two senior members of the most widely-advertised firm of designers and makers of women's garments in the world, Potash & Perlmutter, are going to be in Portland all next week? They will also show some of the latest styles in gowns and coats, having a large line of specially chosen samples, together with living models to display them upon.

Of course, you all have read at some time or other about these two enterprising gentlemen whom Montague Glass immortalized in the Saturday Evening Post stories, and who have since been further brought into the limelight by the clever comedy founded upon their unique personalities and business experiences. In line with the big New York successes so far presented this season by the Alcazar Players at Baker Theater is this one, which comes as a sort of Thanksgiving week offering and will open tomorrow matinee.

Potash and Perlmutter as Roles Will Be Portrayed by Albert McGovern and George Taylor.

The two partners will be portrayed by Albert McGovern, leading man, who will be seen as Perlmutter, and George Taylor as Potash. Some playgoers have been heard to remark that they thought it next to impossible for any stock company to correctly present a play of such distinct types as "Potash & Perlmutter," and they will be surprised to learn that the few first-class stocks that have played it so far have scored immense successes.

It should beat all records at the Baker next week, where an unusually excellent performance may confidently be looked for, with the record the Alcazar Players have already established there. There will be an extra matinee Thursday (Thanksgiving day).

HOWARD GOULD IS HERE WITH "GARDEN OF ALLAH" COMPANY

Portland Is Favorite With Actor, Who Doesn't Pretend to Be Related to Millionaire, Despite Mishaps on Previous Engagements Here.

BY LEONE CASS BAER

HOWARD GOULD can pin a medal on his manly chest and go sit apart in a class all by himself among actors. He is the only thespian in captivity who doesn't press advantageous publicity points.

For instance, there's his name, Howard Gould. Yeh, I thought it was the other one, too, for a long time, for I wasn't here in Portland when this Howard Gould was leading man with the Baker Players. But you do notice the similarity of names, now, don't you? The other one married Katherine Clemmens and divided his ninety billions of kale with her when they divorced each other. And now he's become an Englander. But we shouldn't care if England doesn't.

And d'ye see how very easy, oh, how very easy it would be for the Garden of Allah Howard Gould, the actor one, to say quite casually when he's being interviewed, or signing the hotel register, or being introduced, "Oh, yes, I'm distantly related to the Goulds, Howard and I are named for the same great uncle." Impression stuff, eh? A lotta folk would eat it up, lend him money and everything. And Mr. Gould would not be establishing a precedent either.

Howard Gould, With "The Garden of Allah" Company at the Heilig.

Most Actors Boast.

Eight out of ten actors boast of their rich relatives before you've been with 'em ten minutes. Their paw is a Mayor somewhere in Kansas; there's a college professor on the family tree of every I-seen-it-and-I-done-it chorus lass; there's a splash of royal blood in a few, and, oh Lord, the many, many whose forebears came over in the Mayflower! Honestly, that old boat must have held the great-grandfathers of the entire theatrical world.

I've met 50 great-great-great-nieces of George Washington, and every man or woman named Wilson is some distant connection of Woodrow's. I met an almost actress t'other day who maneuvered through baffling mazes of bird chatter to lead the subject around to a point where she could mention, for publication, of course, she fondly hoped that she had been asked to a luncheon where Mrs. August Belmont was the guest of honor. Can you beat it?

Offhandedness Is Skilled

Oh, believe me, there is a certain skillful off-handedness required among folk, and not always theatrical folk, either, in dropping the fact, quite unconcernedly that so and so is a second cousin of a second cousin of their mother's.

That is why I am putting Howard Gould Astor in a niche all by himself. He isn't any relation to the other Howard Gould and, what's more, doesn't want to be. He could be a fourth cousin as easy as not, and we'd never know any difference out here, but he refuses.

The only thing he wants printed about himself is a four-head screech of joy that he's here in Portland. "I was happy here," he said, "and made loyal, fine friends, who have never forgotten me, nor have I forgotten them.

Previous Engagements Played.

"In 1905 I played at the Baker stock, and before that I had learned to love Portland during a stock season here with the James Neill-Oliver Morosco Company. It was in March of 1905 that I was thrown from a horse and so seriously injured internally that until the next October I lay in a local hospital, dying, as I believed. Even after I returned to New York it was months before I returned to the stage.

"Portland is a jinx town for me. Two seasons ago when I was here with Margaret Illington in "Within the Law" I sprained my ankle. Three seasons ago when I was here in "Madame X" I lost a valuable cane—a treasured keep sake. On this trip my wife gets a cold and we can't go up on the Columbia Highway, and I've been living for that trip ever since our tour West begun.

"But, despite its jinx proclivities," he smiled, "Portland is still the loveliest and dearest spot on my tour map."

And he means it, too.

EXCHANGE WILL OPEN

RELIEF OF POOR OF CITY TO BE STARTED AT ONCE.

Rev. E. V. O'Hara, George A. Thacher and Mrs. C. J. Devereaux to Nominate Officials.

The confidential exchange, under the auspices of the Public Welfare Bureau in co-operation with the other charities of the city, will begin its work Monday.

Decision to perfect organization and begin work immediately was made at the meeting of the delegates from about 40 charitable organizations of the city who assembled at the Public Welfare Bureau offices yesterday afternoon.

Headquarters will be opened for the exchange in the Courthouse, probably in room 441, adjacent to the offices of the Public Welfare Bureau.

The purpose of the exchange is to form a clearing-house for information which will make it possible for all the charities of the city to avoid duplication in their efforts to relieve the poor.

Meetings of the committee will be held each Monday at 4 o'clock P. M., beginning the first Monday in December and continuing to April.

At the meeting the first Monday in December election of permanent officers for the exchange will be made. Rev. E. V. O'Hara, George A. Thacher and Mrs. C. J. Devereaux are members of the nominating committee, which will report at that time.

COUNTY LEVY 4.4 MILLS

ADVISORY COMMITTEE SUBMITS TENTATIVE BUDGET.

Commissioners Will Consider Adoption on Monday—Parole Officer at $1500 Is Requested.

The tentative county budget prepared by the advisory budget committee calling for a levy of 4.4 mills was submitted to the County Commissioners yesterday. The question of its adoption will be made a special order of business Monday, at a meeting of the Commissioners.

A petition for the appointment of a parole officer at a salary of $1500 a year for county work was presented to the Commissioners yesterday and placed on file. The need was indorsed by the six Circuit Judges of the county, District Judges, District Attorney, Sheriff and Board of Directors of the Oregon Prisoners' Aid Society.

There were 162 men paroled in this county in 1915, of 50 paroled in the first 10 months of 1916, many of whom broke their promises and upon whom slight check was kept, due to the lack of a special officer for this work, it is said.

Commissioner Holman announced yesterday that the State Association of County Judges and Commissioners, of which he is president, would meet in annual conference in Portland December 12-15, with the County Surveyors of the state. The chief purpose of the convention is for the recodification of the road laws and presentation to the Legislature and discussion of the problem of the indigent.
