TRAINING THE CHILD

BY WILLIAM BYRON FORBUSH, PH.D.

(Copyright, 1916.)

IF YOU were asked, off-hand: Which will be the wiser, to educate your child in such a way as to develop his strongest side or to give him an all-round training, I venture to guess that you would vote in favor of making him an all-around man.

The trouble is, it cannot be done. If you have a child who is "born long" in some particular direction and "born short" in others you can by neglect prevent his strength from lengthening, but you cannot possibly pull out his shortness to even average length. What you will accomplish is this: He will never become the extraordinary man according to his own bent that nature intended, and he will wrestle in discouragement with the effort to do even respectable work along the lines where he was born weak.

To explain why to so many million people life does not seem worth living. Do you wish your child to be happy? Then find out where he was "born long."

If there is something that he has shown a strong interest in for a number of years, get him a chance to play with or study of work at it to the furthest possible extent. Let him have also broad training, culture, accomplishments, if you can. But don't force him from his own right of way upon any siding of your own fancy.

When he gets ready to choose his calling, insist that the main issue is that he shall be able to shout every morning, with Marcus Aurelius, "I am going with gladness to that work for which I was born into this world." He may decide to become a barber, when you wanted him to be a minister. Well, he had better be a good and happy barber than a discouraged minister. For "happy is the man who has found his work."

manded to be home at 6 o'clock, but he had become interested in chopping small trees and earning money for the kindling. "Aren't you ever going to be more obedient, Harry, about coming to supper on time?" his mother asked him in despair. "Do you really want me to be more punctual? I will, if you really want it." The mother, who was an unusual woman, thought a moment and answered: "No; if that extra hour makes all the difference to you, you can wait until 7 and have supper with father and me." She realized that his first absorption in a piece of work and the ambition that was awakening were more important than conformity to her command.

This sensible attitude, instead of breaking down obedience, would make the boy more conforming. By co-operating with him she made him willing to co-operate with her.

CONFERENCE TO BE HELD

FREE METHODIST CHURCH TO OPEN QUARTERLY MEETING TONIGHT.

Ministers From Various Circuits In Oregon to Attend—Aggressive Campaign for Rest of Year Planned.

The third general quarterly meeting for the Portland district of the Free Methodist Church of the Oregon Conference will convene at 7:30 o'clock tonight in the First Free Methodist Church, East Ninth and Mill streets. Rev. Frank L. Burns, district superintendent, will be in charge. Meetings will be held every night and each afternoon until and including Sunday. Ministers from the various circuits will be present and will preach from time to time, as the district superintendent appoints. The Rev. Burns will preach Sunday morning. Special music will be arranged for the entire conference, and the public is invited to all meetings.

Rev. Alexander Beers, the pastor, is planning an aggressive campaign for the remainder of this conference year. Bishop Walter A. Selew, of Jamestown, N. Y., will conduct special revival meetings the last of this month or the first of next month. Bishop Selew is one of the prominent men of the denomination and has many friends in Portland and throughout the conference. It is planned to have Bishop Selew to deliver a number of missionary addresses during the meetings.

Bishop Selew has been around the world in the interest of missions and is the president of the general missionary board of the Free Methodist Church. The bishop will be accompanied by his wife, Mrs. Rebecca Selew, who is prominent in missionary and church work. The bishop and his wife will be entertained at the home of Rev. Alexander

SEVERAL SPEAKERS FINED

Municipal Judge Will Not Remit Any More Penalties.

The first "batch" of speeders to be arrested since the advent of 1917 appeared before Municipal Judge Langguth yesterday to testify to the violation of Motorcycle Patrolman Ervin. With the exception of S. M. Blowers, all pleaded guilty. Mr. Blowers was fined $8; E. F. Bolen, $8; W. G. Johnson, $2; M. D. Owens, $12, and C. D. Eddy, $12.

With the imposition of these fines Municipal Judge Langguth announced that fines in his court for speeding will henceforth match the ability of the offender to pay, and the old system of remittance fines will be done away with.

Cadet Club to Give Party

The Cadet Club of the United Artisans Assembly will give another stepping party Thursday evening at the West Side Woodmen of the World Hall. Miss Florence Hanlon, captain of the Gads, has appointed the following committee on arrangements: Eleanor Shaw, Anna Hoffman, Dorothy Medrow, Beanie Krayer, Irene Raley, Jeanette Raley, Bobbie Hoagland and Louise Heusch. There will be tables for "five hundred" also.

Square Pegs vs. Round Holes.

You are an artist, let us say, and your child shows talent as a musician. If you insist upon giving him an art education he will at length do passable routine work, uninspired and unimproving. He may also thereby lose the opportunity to be the superb inventor which technical training would have opened the way for him to become.

"But my son is as smart as the next one. I guess if he puts his mind upon it he can do good work in any field to which he applies himself."

Here is the great fallacy. "Smartness," that is, general alertness, is not transferable through every channel at will. You can send electricity through a copper wire but not through a lead pipe. There is power enough, but lead is not a good conductor. Neither will industry ("putting his mind upon it") make up for a native incapacity.

You recognize this fact in limited fields. You would not think of trying to make an artist of a person who was color blind. But we are not so willing to recognize that there are several other kinds of blindness that are congenital and incurable. William Hawley Smith quotes as examples a certain judge who could never learn to "tell time; an illiterate who never could learn to spell; a great statesman (Charles Sumner) who was "little more than an imbecile, mathematically; and a successful school teacher who never was able to tell her right hand from her left without a strain of mental effort.

Jane, the Peeper.

To the Editor: Jane has developed a very disagreeable habit of prying into private places, opening boxes and letters and trying to overhear conversation that is not intended for her. I have never met anything of the sort before and I am sure I don't know what to do to cure her of the habit.

MRS.

The habit is not intentionally unpleasant. It strikes me as partly due to idleness. If her time were more fully occupied with work and play she would not pursue this amusement, which requires some leisure and forethought to carry out. She seems to be imaginative and very likely has read about buried treasure and mysteries found in chests and attics. I well remember as a boy being sure that behind a certain door in my home there was a secret passage, and that within a tall secretary there was a concealed drawer and spring. Many children are on the lookout for such mysteries. I am impressed that Jane plays alone too much and that if she is with other children who scorn these sneaking ways she will become ashamed of them.

You have perhaps already talked plainly with her about this. You have reminded her that she has secrets that she does not want her little brother to know, and so she must not pry into those of others. I know of a mother who told her child the myth of Pandora, whose curiosity let loose from her box a flock of troubles. She arranged it that whenever this little girl exercised her curiosity unduly she suffered the appropriate trouble. After she had surprised and exposed the plans for a picnic she had to make her inquisitiveness take the place of going to the picnic herself.

Is It Safe for Mother to Change Her Mind?

To the Editor: You dropped a remark the other day to the effect that sometimes in discipline a parent found it wise to revise his attitude. Can you give me any actual illustration of a case where it was safe for a mother to change her mind?

DISCIPLINARIAN.

I got this one from Ella Lyman Cabot. Harry had been strictly com-

Royal Arch Masons, Knights Templar and their friends attended the third of the series of Knights Templar parties given last night by Commandery No. 1 in the Masonic Temple. Cards were a feature of the affair, the non-players entering into the festivities of the dancing in the ballroom.

Attractive prizes were awarded the high scorers in the card games, and delicious refreshments were served at the close of the galette.

Mrs. B. E. Tate and Madame Valair will give an informal musicale tonight at Eilers Hall, to introduce Miss Alice Genevieve Smith, a charming and clever harpist.

Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Childs, who were married recently in Boise, arrived at

Go and find out. The popular theory that any man can do anything he undertakes to do, whether he "has any head" for it or not, if he tries hard enough and keeps trying long enough, he "concludes to be the most cruel of fallacies. The attempt to do this creates most of the discouragements in school, accounts for nearly all the mistakes in vocation and does a good deal
