SAKE STILL FOUND

Large Japanese Liquor Plant and Store Discovered.

SUICIDE EFFORT SPOILED

Census-Takers Stumble on Factory in North End and Seize Big Supply of Liquor—Plant is Seen in Full Operation.

The source of recent Japanese "jags" of frequent appearance on the police docket for several months, is believed to have been disclosed yesterday, when Patrolmen Miller and Wellbrook raided a complete sake moonshine still at 263 Flanders street, and arrested the operator, K. Sumata, a Japanese. Assigned to duty in the census-taking of Chinatown migrants, the two patrolmen, both veterans of the North End beats, entered tenement and lodging-houses on the duty of the moment, but vigilant to observe any clew to the source of the contraband sake which has enlivened the Oriental quarter of late. At 263 Flanders, on the second floor of that rambling tenement, they knocked at Sumata's barred and bolted door. Without parley the Japanese, presumably expecting customers or friends, drew back the locks and opened the door. As he saw the two plain-clothes patrolmen, familiar figures in the North End, he struggled to close it again, but the police thrust past him. Two stills simmered in plain sight over a gas stove.

Arrest at Sake Steeped. "Well, you're under arrest, old man," said Patrolman Wellbrook. Sumata sprang into another room. "I keep myself," he cried, and cast about for a weapon. The police closed with him, and for some moments Sumata struggled with his captors. Then he regained his calm, and said with philosophical nonchalance, "All right, what you going to do with me?"

Both stills, one of five and one of ten-gallon capacity, were in operation, and the pale, whitish liquor of Japan dripped steadily from the distilling "worms." There were four rooms in Sumata's little "made in Oregon" enterprise, each given over to some detail of sake distillation. Seventeen barrels of pearl-white rice and water, the fermenting mash from which sake is distilled, were in another room, each barrel filled to 35-gallon capacity. The contents were in various stages of fermentation, some ready for the big wooden presses, others just started in the evolution that produces alcohol in the form of rice whisky.

Liquor Storeroom Found. Another room housed two huge wooden presses, of careful craftsmanship, and from their spouts poured the yellow fermented rice liquor that enters the stills. At least 500 pounds of pressed-out mash was piled on the floor.

In the fourth room Sumata had stored the product of his plant, 20 or 30 gallons of the fiery liquor itself, ready for sale in gallon glass jugs. This sake was not the colorless product of the stills, but had been darkened by the addition of caramel, several quarts of which sat upon the benches in the distilling room. Sumata was taken to the police station and "booked" by Patrolmen Miller and Wellbrook, who then turned him over to the custody of the federal authorities. Though Japanese sake stills have been discovered and raided in this city before, the coup of yesterday, the

TEACHERS ARE TO ELECT

Annual election of officers of the Portland Grade Teachers' Association will be held Wednesday, April 4, at 4:40, in Central Library, and will be one of the final meetings at which Miss Viola Ortschild will preside. The coming election was discussed Wednesday at the meeting of the representatives of the Portland Grade Teachers' Association, and many regrets expressed for the expiring of the term of Miss Ortschild, who has been president of the association for the past two years.

MUSIC GOOD AT 'HIP'

Muscle and mirth reign supreme on the new bill at the Hippodrome, which opened yesterday to round out the week. Fascinating little comedienne, plump and pretty, is Flo Adler, who tops the bill. She sings cheerily and two young men guests (3) of the theater, sitting in a front box, join in the singing and add to the novelty and artistic value of the occasion.

TRAVELING MEN TO MEET

The Oregon division of the Travelers' Protective Association will hold its first quarterly meeting in the Elizabethan room at the Imperial Hotel tomorrow night. At that time report of the officers will be received covering the business of the division for the first quarter of 1917.

MEASLES CLOSES SCHOOLS

The Oregon division has made the biggest gain in proportion to the population of any in the United States and a brisk campaign for members will be started in April. During this quarter two new posts have been established in the division, one at Portland and the other at Eugene.
