CAYUSE-BREAKER IS TAKEN

Peddler Will Be Tried Today for Reckless Driving.

When B. Rosenberg, a peddler, tried to break his wild cayuse on Front street yesterday, he came to the realization that Portland is not the city it was half a century ago.

Rosenberg had a cayuse he was going to hitch to a fruit wagon, but he discovered the animal was too spirited for staid Portland without being properly broken. He therefore started out of a South Portland barn at top speed. Down Front street went the horse, his wild eyes bespeaking the wrath that had suddenly stolen

VOTE 306 X YES

Shall Oregon's Constitution Mean What It Says?

Among the important issues to be decided by the people of Oregon on June 5th, is it not important to put an end to voting on Single Tax or any other radical measure and, by implication only, repeal all parts of the constitution not in accord with the amendment, without any mention of the parts of the constitution to be repealed?

Who can fail to see that appear according to the constitution to be repealed? Who can fail to see that every repeal by implication leaves matter in the constitution that does not belong there, and must be removed to reconcile the meaning of the constitution with the language therein used for the information of the people?

At the last general election a determined contest was had over single tax. Had that measure succeeded we know that the entire plan of raising the revenues of the state would have been changed, and a number of sections of the constitution would have lost their meaning, yet no change would have been made in a single section as written in the organic law of the state. Does anyone believe that a majority of the voters could have read the constitution understanding how much of its language remained in force after such a repeal? That such method of repeal is destructive to the existence of any consistent and satisfactory constitution seems to be an indisputable fact.

It is to put a cheek on such destructive and unsatisfactory attempts to make unintelligible repeals that ballot title 306, declaring against repeal by implication, is presented to the people for adoption. There is bitter opposition to this amendment by men who claim the right to vote laws into the constitution and who openly declare there is no possibility of making a constitution for the constitution and who openly declare there making a constitution free from contradictions Such plea is a declaration against government by the people. Under their plan of repeal by implication and mixing laws with constitution it probably is an honest confession when they confess inability to adjust single tax to the constitution.

The men who denounce this amendment declare they can't point out the parts of the constitution to be repealed. If this is true, they do not know what they have repealed when done by implication. The admissions of these men are proof that repeal by implication leaves us in the dark.

Are you going to stand for a plan of government that confuses and annoys, or shall we insist on knowing what we are voting for?
