Haunted, it is said, by fear of life in the European trenches, Walter Mails unceremoniously quit the Portterday to accept a job at one-half the salary in a Scattle shipbuilding plant.

Credie denies the assertion.

"Mails has a contract to the close of the season with us calling for nearly $390 per month," said the Portland magnate. "He was not included in the list of players who were asked to accept cuts in their monthly pay checks."

Judge McCredie says Mails told him he didn't want to fight and as he could make $6 a day as a helper and ballplayer in the Seattle shipyards he intended to jump his contract. Mails is reputed to have informed friends that ship workers would be exempt a reinstatement.

"He's crazy," said Walter McCredie.
"They'll be calling him 'slacker' and he will not make half the money over there he could make here. Always something to worry a baseball manager. Mails is a great southpaw and
