MAIL CENSORSHIP

Postmaster-General Opposed Opening of Letters, but British Find System Often Is of Value in Checkmating Enemies.

WASHINGTON, July 8.—Although of-ficials here take little stock in the more sensational spy rumors that have fol-lowed the submarine attack on the American expeditionary force, it is not unlikely that the agitation may result in more stringent espionage regula-tions, especially with regard to outgo-ing mails and cables. It has been declared authoritatively unnecessary engendering of suspicion against the German-born.

That the efficient German spy system is operating in this country is considered by high officials as one of the inevitable circumstances of the war. The large foreign population undoubtedly makes esplonage easier than in most countries, since the spies can scatter among the foreign colonies and be completely lost to sight.

But there should be a closer inspection of outgoing cables and legislation to that end may be asked, it is said. It is possible also that power will be sught to censor outgoing mails.

At nearly every station through North Dakota and Montana the assembled crowd contained a fair sprinkiling of soldiers, mostly National Guardsmen, not yet mobilized, and this assurance of numerous enlistments also brought a cheerful note to the speeches made by Baron Moncheur, the chief of the mission, and General Lecierce, its military head.

Censer First on Job.

The fact that the first contingent of the American Army and its supplies down to the last mule and the last sack of tobacco have arrived safely at "a French port" is about the only "news" that American correspondents are permitted to cable concerning the landing or the trip across the ocean. The American censor was the first man on the

The Government realizes that such a course probably would serve no good purpose and might generate a spy hysteria of dangerous proportions, like the countries carlier in the war.

I stood with some of our staff officers, also some English correspondents who had come down from their front to "take in" the scens. I did not talk with them on the subject.

I don't know what they thought, but I rather imagine that they had an idea that the first detachments of Americans at least would be a little army which, in their vernacular "wouldn't be up to much."
