broad way answer the oft-repeated question, "Why sacrifice human life and spend thousands of dollars on polar expeditions?"

The Mawson motion photography records for all time scenes on a new continent in the Antarctic which, the expedition party discovered, is rich in copper, iron and precious metals, and when man conquers the climatic conditions and devises means for working the vast deposits, this continent will supply raw material and increase the wealth of the world. This new land explored by Sir Douglas and his party was until 1911 believed to be a vast waste.

The pictures also show animal life that can never be seen in any zoo, for the reason that some of the animals will perish or die when they are taken to the most improved modern refrigerator.

A wind storm and its effect, such as probably occurs only in the South polar region, was photographed and these action views in the pictures have caused hundreds to marvel during the week. Mariners who have been on some of the stormiest courses at expressed open astonishment at the hurricane and ocean storm action pictures taken by the Sir Douglas party.
