FORGER IS ARRESTED

Police Solve Puzzle of Past Three Years.

FULL CONFESSION IS MADE

Supply of Blank Checks Found in Kubblish Is Incentive, and Easy Passing of First One Leads to More Forgery.

In the arrest yesterday and subsequent confession of J. Marshall, a series of petty forgeries which has mystified Portland officials for nearly three years was unearthed. Admitting that he had operated under nearly a dozen aliases and had forged small checks any time he needed a little money, Marshall yesterday made a complete confession to Deputy Sheriff Phillips and a Burns Agency operative, who made the arrest. He is held at the County Jail in default of $1500 bonds.

According to Marshall's own story, which has been substantiated in part, he has been in and around Portland all the time he was forging the checks, but he used an assumed name in nearly every instance and cashed a majority of his checks in widely separated parts of the city so successfully that he eluded apprehension and arrest until yesterday. He admits forging more than a score of checks, says the officers, and has given them a list of the firms which he defrauded. It is believed that he has forged even more checks than he has admitted.

that he first started his forged-check career when he found a large number of blank checks on various Portland banks in a pile of refuse. Being hard up at the time, he said, he wrote out a small check and succeeded in cashing it. Because of the success of his first attempt, he kept the remainder of the checks, which he used any time he was in need of money. "I would use a different name nearly every time," he said. "It made no difference whether I used the name of a person who had money in the bank or not, because I always got them cashed by writing them for small amounts."

Marshall said he was a hollermaker by trade, but did not work much of the time because he could not get top wages. His checks generally ranged from $2 to $10, while the largest check, he said, was for $25. In many instances he appeared in the guise of a workman who wanted to get a paycheck cashed.

AGED FOLK WILL BENEFIT

Sisters of Mercy at St. Joseph's Home Plan Vaudeville.

Sisters of Mercy at St. Joseph's Home for the Aged will conduct a meeting this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The women interested in the vaudeville July 19 are requested to attend today to make arrangements for supplying and serving refreshments, management of tables, booths, etc. Those who participated so creditably in the vaudeville of previous years are cordially invited to serve as tentatively. Others disposed to assist in the work are quite welcome. Anything in the line of refreshments will be gratefully received.

FOOD FOR BOY IS NEEDED

INSTRUCTION ON HOW TO MAKE SOIL YIELD LIVING IMPROVEMENT.

School Garden Association of America Hears Address of Van Evrie Kilpatrick, of New York City.

Useful education that teaches the boy to produce something, rather than academic instruction, is the need of today, believes Van Evrie Kilpatrick, of New York City, president of the School Garden Association of America, which held an afternoon session yesterday at the First Congregational Church.

"The question in the cities is being repeated with more and more emphasis, 'How can I get enough to live?' said Mr. Kilpatrick. 'In my school work I look into the faces of boys every morning who seem not to have had enough breakfast. I am not discussing the war at all; we are reaching a point, or have already reached a point, rather, where some solution needs to be found for the problem that presses upon us.'"

The association urges the wider spread of gardening and farm knowledge that shall help solve the problem of existence. Samuel C. Lancaster spoke of outdoor education, its special need today and the urgent necessity for gardens everywhere. If America is to be fed and at the same time provide a surplus for its allies. He spoke also of the beginnings of the Columbia River Highway and of some of the obstacles overcome in that work. N. C. Maris, also an Oregon man, spoke on gardening and vocational education. His specialty, he said, is industrial club work, but he treated his topic from the broader viewpoint, that included not only gardening but every industrial activity for the child. He said the United States is a country of spendthrifts and compared shiftless habits here with Germany's thrift and efficiency.

Rev. Luther Dyott, pastor of the First Congregational Church, welcomed the association to Portland.
