orable in society's realm by the number of weddings which will be solemnized, but before that month turns the leaf of the calendar there will be several ceremonies of interest.

Tomorrow night will witness a marriage that will claim the attendance of about 65 guests. The beautiful country home of George F. Honey at Gresham will be the scene of the cere-mony. The bride, Mi Edith Catherwood, is a niece of the host, and the bridegroom, Dr. Ralph C. Virgil, is a physician of Dallas. The Rev. Thomas Jenkins, rector of St. David's Episcopal Church, will officiste. The best man will be Lieutenant Robert Krearson; the maid of honor, Miss Katherine Honey; the bridesmaid, Miss Marie Griffin; the usher, John K. Honey; the ringbearer, Margaret Thiers.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Miles have returned from their wedding trip and will make their home in this city. The marriage of. Miss Laverne Mildred Fraker and Mr. Miles was an event of July 20. The bride is socially popular among her many friends. Mr. Miles is connected with a local wholesale con-

An artistic programme was presented at the home of Mrs. Helen Ekin Star-rett last night when a sliver offer-ing was taken for the Army and Navy League. Mrs. Starrett gave clever readings. Miss Frances Gill contributed readings from her interesting book, "The Little Days," and Mrs. Helen Haworth Lemmel sang a group of her child songs. A quartet of soldiers sang patriotic selections. The evening was one of a series planned by the aostess.

Miss Mildred Randall, fiancee of Ronaid Mackenzie, will arrive in Portland today from her home in Eastern Oregon, and will be the house guest of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Luke, at 1462 Mississippi avenue. Mrs. Luke, who is an attractive young matron and a recent bride, is an intimate friend of Miss Randall. It is probable the weding will be solemnized in Southern California, where Mr. Mackenzie has busiat night to his bread and figs, to curl up in shirt and drawers and read the "Arabian Nights" and the Greek prayer book in the original?

The wonder grows. The greatest Greek scholar this side of the Atlantic could not have had anything to say to his child friends. Is it possible that children do not like to be talked at? Are they content to have a quiet listener? I myself once walked through a park for two hours with a school-boy. As we parted he exclaimed enthusiastically: "What a good talk we thusiastically: "What a good talk we have had today!" I had not uttered a Apparently Professor Sophocles never especially tried to "do good" to the children. It is conceivable that children are not anxious that anybody should do them good? Do they some-how realize when we find them en-joyable? I know a silent old fisherman who lives on a shore alone. He always seems to have boys around him. He is seems to have boys around him. He is a reticent man, not a storry-teller. But the boys are in and out of his boats, and in and about his hut, and sometimes he lets one of them sit in the stern while he is out in the harbor. The young find plenty to tease them, plenty who wish to more like. plenty who wish to moralize them. They seem to like better those who quietly respect them.

Restful, Quiet Friends Liked.

Children, of course, enjoy those who play with them and tell them stories. They often passionately admire their teachers, both in secular school and Sunday school. But what amazes me is Sunday school. But what amazes me is that the measure of their devotion often is not the amount of pains we take to cultivate it. I met this week a young woman who has for over two years been almost weekly recipient of adoring letters from a girl who has not been her pupil for the whole of the period, and whom she had seen but twice during it. She does not know period, and whom she had seen but twice during it. She does not know why she is thus admired. She is simple, self-rellant, friendly, and enjoys everybody. The brimming, restless girl finds her sturdiness rest-ful and her charm inimitable. Probably children generally love us not for what we do, but for what we are.
