Deputy District Attorney Gets "Black Hand" Message. Joke at First Suspected

Card Bearing Skull and Crossbones and Menacing Word "Beware" on Eve of Trial of Italian May Be Significant.

Visions of the mafia and the vendetta, draped in Italian vengeance, floated before Chief Deputy District Attorney Collier yesterday morning when he opened his desk and found staring him in the face a real reminder of the "Black Hand."

A two-edged file was buried in the desk. On the top of it was stuck a card bearing a crudely drawn skull and crossbones, a gibbet and a tombstone. On the latter was written "In Memory" Between the gibbet and the crossbones was a darkly penciled "black hand." Below all was the misspelled word "Beware."

Mr. Collier was inclined to look upon the combination as the work of a practical joker, but the fact that he is to begin trying Frank Gaudio, an Italian, for the alleged murder of Lucy Carter early next week suggested precaution.

Lucy Carter was either thrown or fell from a window at the Cadillac Hotel December 22, last. Gaudio and Aquino both have been accused. Patterson said to be the main witness against the two men, was in hiding several weeks because of threats against his life. It is said. When he surrendered himself to District Attorney Evans' office several days ago he was locked up for safe keeping.
