FINANCIAL REPORT WANTED

Council Learns That Wages for Harvest Workers in Oregon Orchards This Year Will Be Raised to Meet Living Costs.

As a publication not essential to the meeds of the time, the Soldiers' News Letter, published in Portland for circulation in the camps at home and abroad, was banned by unanimous vote of the War Emergency Council at a on held at the City Hall last

Investigation of the Soldiers' News Letter had previously been delegated to the committee on war activities, and the committee's recommendations were embedied in a report presented by its chairman, Bruce Dennis. The report, adopted without dissenting vote, is as

We, your committee on war activities, heg leave to report informally on the Soldiers' News Letter as follows: "That the Soldiers' News Letter is a needless publication, inasmuch as its mission is only to reprint news from state papers, which papers, according to the secretary of the State Editorial Association, reach the enlisted men from Oregon.

Business Standing Questioned.

"That, while not having opportunity to investigate the business management fully, nor to see a financial re-port of the paper, it is our helief that the methods used in securing financial support are not along sound business lines. At least some whose names appear as supporters thought they were contributing to a publication sponsored by the Portland Press Club, and expressed considerable surprise when they found that this was not the case,
"We, therefore, recommend that until the management of the Soldiers' News Letter furnishes to the public a finan-cial statement showing that this is a patriotic project, and not one for pri-wate gain, and also that there is suffi-cient need for the publication to justify its expense, the support of all patriotic cople of Oregon be withheld." Concerning the employment of boys in agricultural pursuits during the coming ceason Professor Hastings, of Reed College, reported that he had conferred with A. W. Attorney-General Brown, in Closing Talk, Argues That Reversal of Ruling Would Render State Commission Useless.

With the concluding argument in behalf of the Oregon Public Service Commission given by Attorney-General Brown, the 6-cent fare hearing was brought to a close late yesterday afternoon. The six Circuit Judges, who have been sitting en banc since last Tuesday, will be called upon to deter-mine the validity of the Public Service Commission order of January 6, which empowered the Portland Railway, Light & Power Company to charge 6 cents for streetcar fares in the city of Portland.

The closing argument in behalf of the street railway company was given by Franklin T. Griffith, president of the company, who consumed the greater portion of his time answering the argument advanced last Friday by City Attorney LaRoche. quoting from numerous authori-Mr. Griffith argued that the act creating the commission is in every way constitutional. Ruling Held Administrative.

"The act empowering the Public Service Commission to fix rates of fares for street railways does not amount to a delegation of legislative authority, as the act is the controlling feature." he argued. The act of the commission fixing the measure of charges which the street railway company may exact for fares is in the nature of an administrative act, whereby the existence of certain facts is ascertained, upon the determination of which the statute regulating such measures operates.

In answer to the argument that the franchise contract heretofore existing between the city of Portland and the Portland Railway, Light & Power Company is inviolable, Mr. Griffith contended that the city's charter did not authorize the city to make the franchise contract inviolable, but if it did make such a contract, it was un-alterable only so far as the city was oncerned, but not as the state was
