Little Talks on Classified

Advertising. DISCARDED ARTICLES

At the present time there is a market for all sorts of household goods, cast-off clothing, sacks, rage, paper, metal, bottles, rubber and dozens of other commodities at prices much higher than have ever he-much higher than have ever before prevalled for this class of merchandise.

A careful inventory of the average household would uncover a great many articles which have been cast aside for one reason or another, but which still possess a certain marketable value. Although an article may be of no value to its present owner someone ofse will want it and be willing to pay a good price for it.

A small classified advertisement in The Oregonian describ-
