W. D. WHEELWRIGHT HEAD OF MILK FIRM

Control of Stock of Portland Damascus Milk Company Acquired by New Interests.

ROBERT IRELAND RETIRES

New President Reviews Milk Situation and Says Dairymen's League Forced Company to Seek New Milk Supply.

The control of the Portland-Damascus Milk Company has passed into the hands of William D. Wheelwright, president of the Pacific Export Lumber Company and well-known financier. The change in the control of the company culminated some time ago, but announcement of the change was made yesterday.

"It is true," said Mr. Wheelwright yesterday, "that interests identified with the Pacific Export Lumber Company have acquired the control of the stock of the Portland Damascus Milk Company and will direct its future policy, as in fact, they have been doing for some little time past."

The announcement of change in the ownership of the plant is significant inasmuch as the milk controversy which has arisen between milk producers and distributors has been somewhat centered about this institution.

Dairymen's League Blamed.

"We have no quarrel with anyone and regret exceedingly the difficulty caused by the ill-judged action of the executive board of the Oregon Dairymen's League in trying to force distributors to pay a higher price than that previously agreed upon at the suggestion of the milk commission without consulting the body of the distributors, or giving the latter any opportunity to protect themselves by notices to their customers," said Mr. Wheelwright.

"It was this act alone that compelled us to look up a new source of supply, which has been done, and unfortunately we are not now in a position to use the output of the Oregon Dairymen's League, but we are making strenuous efforts to increase the business and hope by degrees to take our full proportion of the entire product of all their dairies."

"We are paying the price fixed by the milk commission after they had made a thorough examination of the respective costs of production and distribution and are entirely satisfied to abide by their decision should they see fit to advance the price to the dairymen."

Farmers Should Have Fair Profit.

An increase of the price of wholesale milk, Mr. Wheelwright said, would mean an increased cost of milk to the consumer, but, he explained, that it is important that the farmer should receive a return for his product which will yield a satisfactory profit and encourage him to increase his herd.

"No greater disaster in the food line could happen than a serious reduction in the supply of milk, and it is quite possible, in view of the increasing costs, that a further advance will have to be made in the near future," Mr. Wheelwright said.

"But I venture to express the hope that such action will be deferred," he added, "at least for the present. The trouble with the farmer is not the price of milk in Portland, which is 43 per cent, but the price of milk in other parts of the state where he is dependent on the condensers, whose prices are regulated by what the Government pays them for the finished product."

Condensed Milk Supply Big.

"It is a well-known fact that, owing in some measure to transportation difficulties, there is an immense over-supply of condensed milk at the present time and under such conditions it is almost hopeless to look for any improvement in the price at the retail level."

"It seems clear that an advance in the Portland price would not help the producer who supplies Forest Grove and Hillsboro, who would lay a burden, perhaps unnecessarily, on the people of this city. Portland takes only a small proportion of the milk produced in Oregon, so that a higher price here will affect only a few of the farmers and will not help the general dairy situation throughout the state."

"We should hesitate before laying an increased tax on an article of food that is especially required by invalids and children who should have it in bountiful supply and at reasonable prices. An increase in the cost will necessarily work in favor of decreased consumption of milk, the very last economical measure that should be adopted at the present time. What we must do is to inaugurate a propaganda for an increase in its use."

Pure Milk City's First Need.

"I speak with all deference to the members of the Milk Commission who may after examination decide to suggest an increase in the price of milk. I am sure they will be justified in so doing. The cure of the present difficulty, however, seems to me to lie in urging the Government to pay more money for condensed milk and thus enable the factories to pay their suppliers an approximation at least of the Portland price."

"A supply of pure, clean milk is the first need of a great city. The Portland-Damascus Milk Company will keep up the high standard already established for its products and will do everything in its power to furnish them always at such prices as the Milk Commission shall set to improve methods of delivery, introduce economies and enlarge the use of this most important article of nutrition in order that other foods may be saved for the use of our soldiers and allies in Europe."

A. M. Work will continue in the capacity of manager of the institution, according to Mr. Wheelwright.

Mr. Wheelwright becomes president of the company, succeeding Robert Ireland, who resigned from that position recently because of ill health.

ALLEGED PACIFIST JAILED

Gunner Gunnerson Says He Has Horror for Firearms.

Gunner Gunnerson is the name of an alleged pacifist who was among several men of draft age arrested by members of the police force yesterday morning and turned over to the Federal authorities.

Gunner, despite his name, is said to have a horror for firearms and is anything but of belligerent nature. After he had a chance to explain why he was in Portland without a classification card, it may be decided that he is fit to take up a gun against the Hun. He is 28 years old and a native of Norway.
