erican Jackies and British Tars. The co-operation between the British and American navies which was begun in this wise should be clearly underood in order to avoid misapprehension which German propaganda is only to eager to foster. It was out of the question for American ships to be operated from British naval bases under a separate, detached organization of their own. To carry National pride to the extent of trying to "run our own show" would have been futile and foolish in the extreme. There is no red-blooded American more jealous of his country's dignity than Vice-Admiral Sims, and he was quick to comprehend that the

he was quick to comprehend that the one supreme object was to obtain the greatest possible efficiency in active operation against the enemy.

"When our ships are working from your bases," he said to the Admiralty, "they are to be regarded as divisions of the British navy, operating in concert with your ships and your plans. No other scheme is feasible."

The sailors of the American destroyer flotilias were somewhat puzzied at first to find a British Admiral in command of their base and apparently directing their base and apparently directing their movements. They had crossed the ocean to serve under Sims, "a he-man who had forgotten more than most of the wise guys know about destroyers."

In front of Admiralty House and its gardens, on the hillside that overlooked the harbor, the White Ensign flew from its lofty pole, and the trim, immaculate commanders of the American destroyers trudged up the steep street to pay their respects to the austere man in the uniform of the Royal Navy. British Admiral Is Boss.

"What do you know about this Ad-miral Sir Lewis Bayly, K.C.B., C.V.O., and the rest of the alphabet?" a mildly curious bluejacket asked of a shipmate.

"On the level, is he the big boss of this little old Yankee outfit?"

"That's the dope, Bill, and I guess it's all right. He and Sims are as sociable as two kittens in a basket. If Sims didn't like it, he'd say so, all right. He wouldn't hesitate to go to the mat with any old British Admiral."

"You have to take off your hat to

"You have to take off your hat to this Bayly as a number one naval of-ficer, so I hear," observed the first bluejacket. "He's rated a hard man in the service,—he has the Britishers shakin' in their shoes,—but he is surely there with the goods."

What's his record? Has he handled destroyers?"
"Has he? He commanded the whole

No disrespect was intended. The fa-miliar manner of address betokened admiration. The American officers and sailors saw their fleet rapidly adjust itself to these novel conditions and were frank to acknowledge that the scheme of operation was singularly successful. There was neither friction nor waste motion, an American chief-of-staff working in complete under-standing with the British vice-admiral. It was an unprecedented situation and a most noteworthy episode in the nava-histories of the two nations.

The destroyer commanders may have been a little dismayed after their first interview with Admiral Bayly, who never wasted a compliment nor said a word more than he meant and whose reputation was that of a naval autocrat. They were on trial, flung into a game wholly unfamiliar to them and they wholly unfamiliar to them and they They were on trial, flung into a game wholly unfamiliar to them, and they had not yet found themselves. They were to be measured up with the standards and traditions of the mightlest navy that ever floated, a British Navy schooled by three years of incessant warfare. It was Bayly who had signalled to an English port the request that a flottila of his own destroyers be sent to him for some special service. They arrived, but when he ordered them to sea again they delayed because of a furious gale that raged outside. Thereupon Admiral Sir Lewis Bayly sent them home again. The senior officer at the English base courteously signalled:

BOLSHEVIK PLOT EXPOSED Plan Defeated to Attempt Rising in United States.

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 15.—Plans for the enrollment in Detroit of 20,000 Russians with Bolshevik tendencies for the purpose of harassing the Government's war programme and starting a country-wide revolution have been revealed by confessions of three Russians, arrested with five others Friday night at a Russian boarding house, according to Federal officials tonight.

An Austrian now in custody who came here from Chicage was named in the confession as leader of the plot, it was stated.

Receipts found in the possession of some of the men show dealings with Bolshevik banks in Russia.

"Has he? He commanded the whole British destroyer fleet for a while hundreds of 'em. And divisions of battleships after that. Just to show the young destroyer officers how to stand the gaff, he did a trick of 36 hours straight one time, on the bridge in the dead of Winter."

"He'll do, boy. I guess it's safe to let Admiral Sims run things from his London headquarters and keep an eye on the whole show."

"Yes, he has the coast of France and the Mediterranean to keep general track of, and the Admirality to jolly along, besides various diplomatic stunts to pull off every few minutes. He may as well leave these skittish young destroyers to you and me and Uncie Lewis Bayly."

GOVERNOR'S PLAN

Executive Will Ask Attorney-General to Probe Parole

BICKERINGS MUST CEASE

If It Becomes Necessary There Will Be Thorough Cleaning Out of Prison Officials, Declares Mr. Withycombe.

SALEM, Or., Sept. 15 .- (Special.) -"When Attorney - General Brown re-turns from his vacation I shall request him to make a thorough investigation of the prison affair and let no guilty man escape," declared Governor James Withycombe today.

"I have absolute confidence in the honesty and integrity of the higher prison officials. There have been unfortunate jealousy and bickerings among some of the officers, accentuated largely by tales from criminals ed largely by tales from criminals whose desire is to array one officer against another. "If it becomes necessary for the best interests of the state and the institution, there will be a thorough cleaning out of officials from cellar to garret." The authorized statement issued by The authorized statement issued by Governor Withycombe gives the latest twist to the penitentiary affair, alleged to involve $200 of a convict's money and consequent suggestions of possi-ble irregularities in regard to the securing of paroles. Evidences of Strife Seen. Regardless of the fact that all has been serene on the surface among the officials at the penitentiary, it has been generally believed for a long time that the most amicable of relations have not existed between Warden Murphy and Parole Officer Keller. A sort of a "you-go-your-way-and-l'll-go-mine" agreement has been in evidence be-tween those officials for months, and it is understood that over a year ago Warden Murphy suggested to Governor Warden Murphy suggested to Governor Withycombe that an arrangement should be reached whereby he handle the affairs of the penitentiary proper and that Parole Officer Keller attend to his duties as parole officer. Such an arrangement has apparently been in effect and there has been no outward clashing, but numerous incidents have developed during the past year which have indicated that no particular love has been lost between them. Spokane Incident Recalled. As an instance it is recalled that when Parole Officer Keller was in Spokane to return a man to the prison sev-eral months ago, a newspaper story emanated from there relative to a convict leaving the prison under a rain of bullets and after a most sensational intimation referred to Parole Officer Keller. A number of similar minor in-cidents may be recalled indicating a strained relationship on both sides.

Apparently Governor Withycombe' statement today does not mean that there will be an immediate clean-up at the penitentiary, but the executive con-veys the broad hint that jealousy which has been existing between the officials must cease at once or the executive ax will fall on a number of heads at once. Y. M. C. A. HUT IN QUESTION What May Be Aberdeen's Loss Will
