The successes of the French coincide with fresh outbreaks of fire in the villages occupied by the Germans in the north toward Vouziers. Aviabill until after the November elections tors report that Semide and Mont St. seemed assured today, when the Senate Martin and even towns further to the north are in flames.

> In taking Challerange and the heights of Croix Des Coudans Gouraud's troops have accomplished another remarkable feat of arms. There is probably nothing more formidable in the Hindenburg line anywhere than the defenses which the Germans had raised here to defend their access to the region commanding the Valley of the Aire and Grand-pre. After breaking through lines of trenches and barbed wire five miles deep, General Gouraud attacked this position and carried it against reinforced troops that counter-attacked him three times in vain.

Hun Positions Endangered.

The possession of Challerange and Croix Des Soudans by the French seriously compromises the position of whatever German troops remain in the forest of Argonne and in the region north of Orfeuil.

No longer is there an outlet to the west from the Argonne region open to the enemy and the American advance along the eastern edge of the forest virtually closes the eastern exit from the Grand-pre gap. The only railroad line available to the troops in the wooded region north of Orfeuil is now under the fire of
