EIGHT-CLUB COAST LEAGUE IS ASSURED

McCredies Leave for Seattle to Attend Special Meeting.

VANCOUVER PROXY HELD

Pacific Coast International Will Be Voted Out of Existence, if Plans Materialize.

BY JAMES J. RICHARDSON. Judge McCredie, owner of the Portland basebell franchise in the Pacific Coast International League, accompanied by his nephew, Walter Mc-Credie, former manager of the Portland team, left last night for Seattle, where they will be on hand today for the special meeting called by President Blewett to act on the request of the Pacific Coast League to acquire the Portland and Scattle franchises, thereby expanding the class AA league to an eight-club circuit.

Dynamite Placed Under League. Judge McCredie wants again to share his baseball destiny with the Pacific Coasters. David Dugdale is of the same frame of mind, according to dispatches from the North. Walter McCredie will cast the vote for Vancouver. Wash, and it will be up to the Sullivan brothers, who financed the Aberdeen Club last season, to follow suit.
In other words, the action of the Paelfic Coast International League at to-day's gathering will be to dynamite their own organization, and from the debris will follow the best brand of baseball in the country outside of the Big Problems Loom.

David Dugdale, speaking of the Pacific Coast League's request that Portland and Seattle be included in an eight-club circuit, is quoted as follows in a Scattle paper:

"A league extending from Los Angeles to Seattle is the ideal one for the Coast, but there are a lot of problems to be considered. If ever there was a time for a real Coast league, it is now."

sential work, such as shipbuilding or draft, and probably duty in a frontline trench. Thousands of others did the same thing, and in many cases rendered perhaps a greater service to their country than if drafted into the Army. Men from all walks in life, who were in a business which the Government classed as non-essential. did as some of the star players. The when some star does something out of the ordinary, on or off the ball field he is sure to get considerable publicity I am not saying this as a defense fo l am not saying this as a defense for players who made themselves immune from the draft by getting into an es-sential occupation. The fate of such players from a baseball standpoint is in the hands of the club owners to whom they belong, and the dear old mublic.

The point I desire to make is that the professional ball players as a class are not slackers. They have answered the call nobly, and some of the boys have done big things over there. notably Hank Gowdy and Hugh Miller. Not only have the players done their share in putting the skids under Germany, but American sports as a whole, have been a determining factor in the outcome of the war. It would be a rather broad and strange statement to say sports as indulged in by the French, English, Canadians, Australians Italians Americans and others ians, Italians, Americans and other won the war, but you can rest assured sport played a worthy part in the success of the allies. The French are strong supporters of boxing and fen-cing. England is strong for soccer, boxing and cricket. In America most any sport that has plenty of action is popular. We have baseball, football of all kinds, hockey, tennis, lacrosse boxing, wrestling and so on.

If you have any doubt as to what many Americans think about sport's part in the war, peruse the following excerpts from a letter I recently re-ceived from an American officer, who has seen plenty of action at the front, and who is an excellent judge of men and their capabilities: "Well, Bill, it is all over, the German entry just couldn't stand a rough ride when we hit the home stretch. ride when we hit the home stretch. Sports in general and baseball in particular, have done a great big bit toward winning the war. The superior "pep" and fighting spirits of the American soldiers, can be traced unerringly to their participation in, and their devotion to sport. The square-heads in Germany have no sports such as baseball, football, wrestling and boxing to teach them how to think fast. The Yanks had it on the Huns from the jumpoff. One Yank was worth about five Germans when it came to doing things. At Chateau Thierry the proportion was, one Yank worth about 10 portion was, one Yank worth about 10
