ANGLERS AWAITING RUN OF STEELHEADS

Prospects Are Bright for Excellent Fishing Soon.

STREAMS EASILY REACHED

Sandy River, East of Portland, Most Popular Water Course for Those With Limited Time.

Anglers who enjoy winter fishing and are willing to brave the severe weather have not as yet met with many thrills in streams within easy reach of Portland.

Steelheads, such as are sought in the months of December, January and February, have not yet banded together and made assault on any particular stream.

Most popular of all streams is the Sandy, east of Portland, and between a one or two-hour ride by either electric or automobile.

Down the Columbia, on the Oregon side, are many streams easily reached by railroad. Scappoose creek always attracts anglers.

Woodland or Ridgefield; Washougal river, near Washougal; and the White Salmon, at Underwood, are among the most popular of Washington streams.

The membership campaign of the Multnomah Anglers' club is in full swing. Anglers keenly interested in fish propagation and game protection should enroll.

Rivalry in tournament bait and fly casting is waxing hot around the sporting goods counters at this particular time.
