PORKERS HAVE REAL DRUNK

OFFICER POURS LIQUOR INTO FEEDING TROUGH.

Neighbors, Awakened by Squeals of Joyous Pigs, Profanely Inquire Regarding Disturbance.

And it's a true story.

In a raid by Deputy Sheriff George Harburt a few days ago on the home of Jerry Lolic, a shynard worker, on Union street, 59 gallons of home-made wine were found. Being an awkward lead to carry back to the county jail, the deputy decided to make away with it on the premises. He tipped over the hoghead into the trough feeding the pig-pen and went away.

Mrs. Lolic was the only person on the farm at the time, her husband being at work. He was not found that evening by the officers, having been called from his duties by a frantic telephone message from his wife.

"Come home quick, Jerry, our hogs have died!" pleaded Mrs. Lolic. Roused from his slumber by the news, Jerry rushed to the farm. He found the hogs dead and the trough empty. He had no idea what had happened.

Arriving at home, he ran for the pig-pen. There, flat on their backs or prostrate on one side lay his prize porkers. He coaxed them, he prodded them, he implored them to come to life. One grunted and exhaled a long breath. Lolic listened at their sides. Through layers of fat came the dull thumping of porcine hearts. His own heart leaped responsively. At least they were not dead.

It was too late to get a doctor, and hoping for the best, the Lolics retired. At midnight the air was rent with

MARSHFIELD BOY IN NORTH

Milton Carlson Writes Letter From Murmansk Port.

MARSHFIELD, Or., March 20.—(Special.)—Milton Carlson, a Marshfield boy in Uncle Sam's navy, writes home from the Murmansk coast, where he arrived in February, and says he had a difficult trip around the Arctic regions. The vessel the party went on was a yacht, used as an auxiliary craft. The harbor was filled with allied war vessels and merchantmen.

Admiral Cully, the American naval man in charge of the States affairs, makes his headquarters on a British war vessel, as the United States seems to lack warships in the port. Admiral Cully's aides have headquarters in a first-class passenger car, held on a siding on shore.

OREGON MUST BE PATIENT

BUILDING OF ROADS DECLARED IMPORTANT TASK.

S. Benson Returns From California Ready to Resume Work on Highway Commission.

"Counties in Oregon must not be impatient for good roads," said S. Benson, chairman of the state highway commission, who has returned home after several months of rest in California. Mr. Benson does not expect a vacation again for a long time owing to the big amount of road work which is ahead of the commission.

"Road work will proceed as rapidly as the commission can have it performed with efficiency and absence of waste," he continued. "There are many counties now planning to issue road bonds, among them counties which in the past have taken slight interest in road development, and more will be considering road bonds before long. All this is well enough, as it displays an awakening to a most important need in Oregon, but every county voting bonds will expect the state highway commission to immediately build roads in those counties."

"I am convinced that the first road which should be completed is the Pacific Highway. It should be put in

Chehalis Elks to Take Census.

CHEHALIS, Wash., March 20.—(Special.)—The city commission has authorized the local Elks, who are desirous of securing a lodge in Chehalis, to take a census of the city without expense. City Commissioner T. J. Long has supervision of the work. The local members are enthusiastic over the outlook for a strong lodge at Chehalis, having secured a most representative list of possible members.

Coos Commission Makes Offer.

MARSHFIELD, Or., March 20.—(Special.)—The Coos bay port commission submitted a plan to the municipality of Chehalis, Wash., for the dredging of a channel from the channel in the upper harbor south of the Smith terminal dock, providing the city would construct a bulkhead at Kruse avenue and pay a force to handle the shore pipe line. The fill will be made by the dredge Oregon.

Old Man Winter Is Chased; Spring and Robins Here.

Change of Seasons Will Be Officially Effected at 11:15 o'Clock Today.

THE calendars say that it's spring. It is weeks since the violets sprang. The giddy old robins, back from the south, hunted worms on the back lot days and days ago. Folks said there was a "feel in the air." The kiddies came home with the first trays of pussy-willows. Pear-trees ask but a day or so before they burst into bloom. The seasons merged so gradually that none could say where the one ended and the other began.

But the fellows who fix the calendar know all about it. They have decreed that today, precisely at 11 minutes past 11 o'clock in the forenoon, the vernal season displaces winter. Private ideas on the beginning of spring, the impulses that sent the robin north, the faint call that told the violets when to wake up, and the urge that raised dust clouds from the parlor rug, are summarily set aside.

For the matter of that, no one ever beheld or breathed a more typically pleasurable spring day than was yesterday—washed with sunshine and peopled with folk who wore their overcoats on their arms, and who sniffed ecstatically as they stepped out. It is treason to the calendar to call it one of spring's, however, because it was officially the last day of winter.
