4TH DAY OF BATTLE IN ARGONNE DEADL

Front Line of 91st Division Quickly Straightened Out.

INFANTRY IN THICK

Devil-May-Care Troops Find Luck Goes and They Bear Brunt of Fighting.

BY COLIN V. DYMENT. TWENTY-SEVENTH ARTICLE,

After the dreadful night of September 28, in which darkness, rain, cold, lack of clothing and blankets and uncertainty, beat against the physiques of wounded and well alike, the 29th, fourth day of the battle, dawned with premise of a clear day. It rained again, it is true, on the night of the 29th, but the fatal day itself was a beautiful one. The front line of the 91st may have been webbly enough through the night, been webbly enough through the night, but in the morning it was rapidly straightened out. Pritz had given the men a miscrable night of it, but had not counter-attacked; nor, omitting a demonstration or so on the left wing, did he counter-attack in the morning. His few remaining snipers and nests in Cierges and Baulny and on the south side of Tronsol farm were soon cleaned out, and the morning was still young when the 91st lay in a solidly held line almost straight east and west from north of the Bolse de Cierges to the Tronsol farm buildings.

The eastern half of this line was held by the 181st brigade. It will be re-membered that the second battalion of the 361st had relieved the third after the Miller Hill charge of the 28th, coming up in the night—a night so harsh that several officers broke down either in the night or on the 28th as a result of the physical and mental strain.

Between 6 and 7 A. M. on the 29th, orders arrived giving the 362d infantry and the second battalion of the 361st the front line for the day on the right wing. The 362d as a whole was still a comparatively fresh body of troops. Readers may have noted how few of its men have been killed in previous articles. Its day to lose had come, how-also from the Pacific northwest and a few Californians. A first-class cattle roping or horse-breaking show could have been got up from the 262d.

On the first day of the battle this regiment had had quite an easy time of it, romping through the barbwire and trench systems in the heart of the Bois de Cheppy with little resistance. Some of its companies lay down for the night opposite Epinonlay down for the night opposite Epinon-ville without having had a casualty. On the second day one battalion was in the front wave in the battle of Epinonville, but by midnight of the second day not 20 men had been killed or fatally wounded in the whole regiment. On the third day most of the 162d lay in Les Epineties Bols, after the Epinon-ville orchard was cleared. There were scattering losses, but it was another now be described.

Just north of the Cierges woods and the Baulay woods, the northern edges of which were now just behind the front line of the 31st, lay an irregular ridge of a little more than 290 feet altitude. This same ridge extended on through the Tronsol farm. The front wave of the right wing, principally 362d, was dug in on the reverse slope of this ridge, near the top, while most of the 361st lay behind in the Clerges woods. The front wave of the left wing was for the most part still in the was for the most part still in the Baulny woods, with a few outposts beyond so that the line might be said to run just north of the woods. Possession of the north side of Tronsol farm was still in dispute.

It was about a mile and a half from the woods of Glerron to the product of the product of the woods of Glerron to the woods of the woods of Glerron to the woods of the woods the woods of Cierges to Gesnes in a straight line. Including the first crest, just behind which the men were dug in in plis, there were three ridges to cross. The ridges were pretty irregu-lar, now running east and west and now north and south. In the first holow between what may roughly be called the first ridge and the second, on the right wing, were two thickets. It was to these thickets that Miller's battalion had all but penetrated on the previous afternoon.

Huns Hold High Places.

Straight west of Gesnes and in front of the left wing brigade were two woods: the Bois de la Morine and the Bois du Chene Sec, north by northwest of the Bois de Baulny and a mile and a half distant from it as a man walks. The Bois du Chene Sec was north of the Bois de la Morine and was joined to it by a neck of forest. Between Baulny woods and Morine woods lay an irregular country through which ran a road up a ravine. This road came nearly straight cast from Exermont, striking half way between Tronsol farm and Baulny woods on the south and the Bois de la Morine on the north, then, at a point a mile north of the Baulny woods, turning northeast to Gesnes. From Exermont, in front of the 35th (which had been vainly attacked by the 35th on the previous day) over to Gesnes by this road, was about three miles. Between Baulny woods and the Tronsol farm buildings on the south and the Bois de la Morine on the north were thickets, one of which was described when the left wing fight on the 28th when the left wing fight on the 28th was related.

Back of Gesnes, north, northeast and northwest, were high hills, mostly wooded. These hills were parked with German artillery, for they were a part of that great eastern extension of the Hindenburg line known as the Kremhilde-Stellung line. In the Bols de la Morine were dozens of machine-gun emplacements. The artillery and machine-gun positions were as usual manned by an invisible foe.

pronounce Gesnes, it is a single syllable, and the pronunciation is almost like Jane or Ghane. The doughboys call the place Gaines. It was a badly knocked-about town, lying in part in the canyon and in part on the side hill beyond. On one side was a cabbage patch that many fist men will remember. Into the Geenes front the 262d in fantry and the second battalion of the 281st had orders to strike at 7 A. M.

on the 20th, the order arriving between 6 and 7. It was as if an order had come to a single man to walk into the jaws of some monster. In tomorrow's installment Lieuten-ant Dyment will describe the futile at-tempt to advance in the morning and will lead up to the great advance of the afternoon, beginning at 3:40 o'clock.

Let's be as enthusiastic over our church as we are over our business affairs. The nation knew the value of advertising. That was easily seen in the victory loan dive. The posters and display ads appealed not only to the intellect and the business judgment but most of all to the heart. Each church member should be a living advertisement for the church. He should appeal to the intellect and to the hearts of those about him. We all want to be 100 per cent Americans. We should be anxious to be 100 per cent Christians.

THE MAKING OF A FAMOUS MEDICINE

How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Prepared For Woman's Use.

A visit to the laboratory where this successful remedy is made impresses even the casual looker-on with the reliability, accuracy, skill and cleanliness which attends the making of this great medicine for woman's ills.

Over 350,000 pounds of various herbs are used anually and all have to be gathered at the season of the year when their natural juices and medicinal substances are at their best. The most successful solvents are used to extract the medicinal properties from these herbs. Every utensii and tank that comes in contact with the medicine is sterilized and as a final precaution in cleanliness the medicine is pasteurized and sealed in sterile pottles. It is the wonderful combination of roots and herbs, together with the skill and care used in its preparation which has made this famous medicine so successful in the treatment of female ills. The letters from women who have neen restored to health by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which we are continually publishing attest to its virtue.
