

MURAD

THE TURKISH CIGARETTE

Oriental Turkish tobacco charmed the natives hundreds of years ago.

And when travelers visited the Orient, a new delight awaited and thrilled them—in smoking Turkish cigarettes.

The tobacco in Murad is 100% Turkish and is gathered from those famous lands—and Murads are both charming and thrilling.

True they are a little more expensive than ordinary cigarettes—but oh, such a difference!

COLUMBIA BEATS BENSON

GAME FULL OF THRILLS ENDS IN 4-TO-3 SCORE.

Young Pitchers Ring Up Many Strikeouts But Are Free With Passes.

Columbia university defeated Benson Tech yesterday afternoon in one of the best games played this season. It was a contest full of thrills and excitement. The score was 4 to 3.

Benson took the lead in the first inning, scoring one run. Baker singled over second and took second on a past ball and went to third on Otto Mueller's hit to right center. Driscoll tried to catch Baker on a third, but Dwyer muffed the ball, Baker scoring.

The game went along with this score until the fifth, when Columbia started a rally. Driscoll and Johnson walked, Schaefer struck out, Bert Jacobberger doubled to left center, scoring Driscoll and Johnson. Pete Sweeney was safe on an error and crossed the plate on Tony Dwyer's single.

Columbia held the lead up to the eighth, when Benson scored. Horn singled and stole second. He went to third on a wild pitch and scored on Driscoll's error.

Benson tied the count in the ninth. Lind walked; Frank doubled to center, putting Lind across the plate with the tying run.

In the last half of the ninth Otto Mueller, of Benson, who had been pitching fine ball all through the game, went up in the air. He walked Driscoll and Johnson. Schaefer struck out for the third time. Jacobberger walked, filling the bases. Mueller tried to steady down but it was plain that he was nervous. He walked Sweeney, sending Driscoll across the rubber with the winning rally.

contest, as these teams have the same standing.

THEFT OF THIRD BASE PROVES EASIER THAN STEALING SECOND

Situations That Arise Do Not Call for Frequent Piffing, Says Billy Evans—Runner Looms as Scoring Possibility When Second Is Reached.

BY BILLY EVANS. OFTEN the query is raised as to why third base isn't stolen more often. The answer is usually the same, that the situations that arise do not call for the steal of third, as often as they do a theft of second. Base runners will admit stealing third is not as difficult as pilfering second. Yet steals of third are rare in comparison with those of second.

That is one reason why the steal of second base is greatly desired, if one or two men are out at the time. If the runner gets to first with none down, and the game is close, and a run needed, then the sacrifice is invariably resorted to as a safer play than the steal. The team at bat is willing to sacrifice an out, and advance the runner to second, where he looms up as a likely scoring possibility.

Runners Held on First. To curtail the possibilities of a runner at first reaching second, pitchers try to hold the runners close. Many resort to moves that just get by the umpire, while the catcher always calls for a pitch out. If he thinks the runner on a certain ball intends to make a break for second base.

Perhaps a dozen times during the season, situations arise that call for a double steal with runners on first and second. At such times the opposition is usually aware of the opposition's intention, but it is difficult to thwart the scheme. If the runner on second is a fast man, it is a difficult proposition to get him at third, the usual manner of making a play on the runner, because, knowing how much is at stake, the runner at second makes it a point to get away with a flying lead.

Detroit Crossed by Athletics. Every time I see such a play tried, I recall a game played at Detroit some years ago, in which the play was broken up in an unusual manner. It was the only time I ever saw the play made by the team in the field as it was that afternoon Philadelphia had Detroit beaten, 2 to 1, when the Tigers started the last half of the ninth. After two men had been retired, Detroit got two men on, Ty Cobb on second, Sam Crawford on first. Jim Delahanty, a good hitter and always dangerous in a pinch was next up. If there was a way to get Cobb to third and Crawford to second, a base hit by Delahanty would break up the game. With runners on first and second, it meant two hits were required to put over the necessary two runs. The double steal was the solution. Mack was positive the play would be attempted. He sent John Mellish with some information to Ira Thomas, who was catching. It concerned the double steal he was confident Detroit would try.

The play by the catcher throwing the runner out on third. It is admitted the stealing of third is easier than second, and with Cobb on second, the chances were in favor of him getting away with everybody, including myself, by making the play backwards. I was lucky to be in a position to render a decision on the play. Instead of trying to get Cobb at third, the catcher made a throw to Eddie Collins at second, who tagged out the surprised Sam Crawford. The play was such a surprise to Sam he didn't even slide. He had even showed up a trifling as he neared second, figuring the play would be made on Cobb at third. Cobb was perhaps the most surprised individual in the park as he saw the Philadelphia club leaving the field. He had hit the dirt at top speed, knew he was safe, and couldn't figure how it had all happened. That play was backwards, yet I have often wondered why it wasn't tried more often when conditions favored such action.

SAMARD HELD FOR ARSON

Accused Man Paroled by Judge During Good Behavior.
