WILLARD TO START FRAINING AT TOLEDO

Champion Loses Little Time in Getting Into Action.

PUNCHING BIG HELP

Fully Ninety Per Cent of Ring Fans Said to Favor Champion in World Event July 4.

Jess Willard will arrive at Toledo next Tuesday and the champion will lose little time getting down to work and then some interesting news will begin to come over the wires. As soon as Willard takes up the training grind ring followers will be regaled with various contradictory stories regarding his appearance, for Willard is not a very impressive performer in the gyni.

The bir fellow's tremendous bulk The big fellow's tremendous bulk the big fellow's tremendous bulk has ever been the most impressive thing about him. Boxing with his sparring partners he never by any chance delivers a hard blow. As a rule the big fellow maintains the defensive throughout, allowing his sparring mates to do most of the hitting.

Willard to Work Hard. Williard works hard enough at the outleys and with the medicine ball. One of the best things he does is to have his mates toss the ball at him with full force while he stops it with his stomach. This exercise so toughers and strengthens his stomach muscles that it takes a terrific body blow to have any effect upon him. Willard has never learned to punch the bag as other ring champions have. Corbett and Fitzsimmons were artists with the bag and even Jeffries could belabor the clusive sphere with great vigor if no particular skill. Johnson also was able to give bag-punching exhibitions that were worth looking at. but Willard never has mastered the

Bag Punching Is Big Help. When the champion was training at the Forty-fourth Street club for his bout with Frank Moran a bag was hung at one side of the stage for his use. Willard tried it out once and that was all. He missed so badly that the growd laughed and Willard, being a very sensitive fellow, ordered it taken away, saying that bag punching was unnecessary anyway.

As Willard will train before large growds it is likely that he again will erowds, it is likely that he again will dispense with the inflated sphere unless he has acquired more skill in its use in the meantime. In his case it may be a big mistake for him to cut out this feature of his training, for un-less he pounds his sparring partners more enthusiasm than usual he will have no way of perfecting his wal-

Champion Is Favorite. Punching the bag is one of the best forms of exercise for a boxer. It quick-ens the eye, strengthens the hitting muscles and perfects the judgment of distance. Because of his long absence from the ring, Willard will be weak in those matters and he may find it a dif-ficult matter to get into shape if he again cuts out the bag, just because he is not an expert.

If Willard is able to get into anything like his old time form he will have the backing of a great many of the leading boxers. Ninety per cent of those who have voiced an opinion regarding the outcome of the bout pick the champion to win. On the other hand, a majority of the managers pick Dempsey. As a general thing, boxers Dempsey. As a general thing, boxers are the worst judges of pugilistic form

Jim Corbett, one of the cleverest big fellows who ever drew on a glove, never was known to pick the winner of a big bout. Corbett wasted more time over impossible white hopes than any other man connected with the ring. And Cor-bett was a fair sample of all the other great fighters.

Very often the result of the game centers around the judgment of the umpire on one particular ball. Such a situation always makes it rather unpleasant for the official, because the losing club the official, because the losing club holds him up as the alibi for the defeat, while the winning team simply figures he rendered the proper decision for which he has no credit coming to him. When the umpire gets by in the best possible manner, nothing but silence possible manner, nothing but slience comes his way. A perfectly correct ruling in a great many cases, however, brings forth nothing but a shower of criticism, if such a ruling proves the turning point of the game.

While the fan may not realize the importance of the calling of a strike or ball, or the rendering of a decision some close play, take it from me the player does. I know some players who, when they get in a dispute with who, when they get in a dispute with you, can recall things that happened half a dozen years ago to prove their contention that you are always giving them the worst of it.

Umpire Has His Troubles.

To illustrate, let me tell of a game last summer, in which I was the plate umpire. The Detroit club was playing at New York. Bill James was pitching for the Tigers. Now Bill has a world of stuff, and when he is getting the ball over he is awfully good, but if control is lacking. Bill is liable to be just the reverse. In the game I have in mind, James had one of those half and half days. He would be terribly wild on a uple of batters, then tighten up, and some fine pitching, pull himself out

The Tigers, through some good hit-ting, gave James an early lead of about four runs. Although he was constantly in the hole in the early stages of the game he kept escaping inning after in-ning without being scored upon. The game gave me one of the busiest aftergame gave me one of the busiest aftermoons I had all season. It seemed as if there were three balls and two strikes on every batter. At times James' lack of control bordered almost on the humorous and in the next instant he would win the applause of the crowd by his fine work. Since he had escaped his fine work. Since he had escaped unscathed until the seventh inning my calling of balls and strikes had not aused the slightest criticism.

from my story.

The batter eventually got a base on talls, but at the time little heed was given to the fact. Then came another base on balls, followed by a third, and the bases were filled. There came a couple of errors; in each case perfectly handling of the ball would have retired the side runless. A base hit or two were mixed in, and when the inning was over the lead of the Tigers had vanished, Detroit was one run to the bad, and by that margin the game was lost.
