LIGHT AERIAL CRAFT FOR NAVY PROPOSED

Deace-Time Policy of Nation Embodied in Report.

HUGE APPROPRIATION EYED

Secretary Daniels Would Develop Improvements on Present Types of Fighting Machines.

WASHINGTON, May 21 .- Construcwashingfor, May 31.—Construc-tion of a fleet of shouting alteraft of the dirigible, or lighter-than-air type, as an adjunct to the American haval forces, is expected by well-informed naval officials to be recommended by the general board of the navy in its report to be submitted within a few days to Secretary Danlels.

While the report, which has been in preparation for the past month, probably will include recommendations for every branch of the naval service, the section dealing with development of a peace-time aerial policy is considered of greatest importance.

The new naval air pelicy, some offi-cials believe, will include recommenda-tions that the United States adopt a type of aircraft heretofore not used in connection with the naval establishment, based on the principles of the German Zeppelin, plus improvements worked out by Great Britain and American aircraft experts during the war, and from the recent flights of the lost dirigible C5 from Montauk, N. Y., to Nawfoundland

Limited Expansion Urged. Secretary Daniels, in discussing the programme today, said that in his opin-on the navy should make no effort toward any large aerial expansion dur ing the next year or two, but should develop the bulk of its effort in experimentation and improvements on existing types. The secretary expressed the opinion that funds appropriated for the aircraft programme should be for the aircraft programme should be used for this purpose rather than for any great increase in flying fields, ground schools or in building large quantities of new machines.

Mr. Danleis said that while he believed that an efficient flying force proportionate to the size of the fleet should always be in readiness he did not think that large sums should be expended on the present partially deexpended on the present partially de-veloped types of alreraft. He pointed out that the trans-Atlan-tic flight had already shown defects in the NC type seaplanes, which are now far in advance of the development along this line reached by any other country. He anticipated further flights of this character as new airplanes and lighter than air craft are developed, the idea of the experimental flights bestructed beyond a few "blimps" de-signed purely for coast patrol duty. The extraordinary flight last week of the C-5, it was learned, has done much to bring that type of craft to the atten-tion of naval experts and at the havy department the opinion prevails that the C-5 easily could have made the flight across the Atlantic with a heavy foreign nations in the manufacture of this type and even profit by the ex-perimental mistakes of other nations. The naval bill, which was lost in a grist of uncompleted legislation at the close of the last congress and which probably will be reintroduced during the special session, contained an ap-propriation of $10,000,000 for the development for the lighter-than-air ma

It is considered almost certain that the general board in its report will recommend that this appropriation be incorporated in the bill the present congress will consider.
