AFTER THE GREAT COMPANIONS

DR. FRANK CRANE IN THE JUNE PICTORIAL REVIEW MAGAZINE

—The race has not run out. We are still men, and worthy of our fathers. That is what Memorial Day, 1919, says to us. Not in pride nor vain boasting, but in fearful and solemn humility we speak, for it is our dead that prompt us. They, our kin and blood, were not afraid to die.

—We put our arms around our dead, and hold them proudly up to God, and glory before all men that this is our breed. The lies of the Accuser are disproved. His slanders fall from us. We are not slaves of greed, money-grubbers, soft and lily-livered. We know how to suffer and die. We, too, can follow the gleam.

—O Greeks of Marathon, room for us! Through Chateau-Thierry and the Wood of Argonne we have come up to stand by your side, and dare to call you Brothers. You Six Hundred of Balaklava, meet these boys from Kansas and New York, who also rode blithely into the valley of death. They are your kind. You men of Bunker Hill, of Gettysburg, and of San Juan, place, place for these, our neighbor's sons, our friends and playmates!

—For them also the laurel, and the royal requiem! For them the Cross of Honor and the Divine Halo!

—They are ours! Ours! Dear God, we will be worthy of them!
