McCredie used two young pitchers and neither of them showed much. "Sude" Sutherland won some games up north but he was no puzzle to the Oaks westerday, and when he entered at the end of the fifth inning the Oaks had collected seven runs.

The sixth saw a young man named Adolph Zweifel pitching for Portland, with Koehler catching. This boy Zweifel was with Fortland training at Marysville two years ago. Mac has Adolph with him again, so it must be he uses him to rest his eyes; certainly there was nothing about his actions yesterday that would indicate that he yesterday that would indicate that he can pitch.

Adolph got rid of the first two men who faced him in the sixth and after that the Oaks made four runs. It was not all the fault of Adolph, but as he allowed three hits he contributed his share to the general rout.

With a jug handled score in his favor Holling let down and the Beavers got a brace of hits in the eighth and another pair in the ninth, accounting another pair in the ninth, accounting for their four runs.

The Oaks ran wild on the bases. They stole eight times and it got so that when a man started for second Del Baker was inclined to throw to third to head him off.

THE brassle seems to have been originally designed for a kind of lie not uncommon on inland courses-the lie on a bare, smooth surface, such as is afforded by a road or path. The golfers of the famous links R. H. E. at Musselburgh found that frequent reo coveries from the road which skirts the course ran up too big a score, not only on the card, but also in the clubmaker's shop. And the tradition is that Mr. Gilbert Mitchell Innes, one of the most famous players of his day and many times a medal winner at St. Andrews, Musselburgh and Prestwick in the '60s and '70s, was the man to bethink himself of having a metal plate nailed on to the sole of his spoon in order to preserve it from damage through contact with the hard surface of the road. Thus sprang into being the great progenitor of the brassle.

If the ballsis lying perfectly clean, as it often is in such a case, and the dis-tance calls for a full shot, there is per-haps no reason why the stroke should not be played in exactly the same man-ner as on the tee, except, of course, that the brassie is used in place of the bons of St. Paul and Jeff Smith of New York will meet in a 10-round bout, and Johnny Dundee and Harvey Thorpe will mix in a 15-round affair.

an accurate aim. Through the green the method of playing the brassic differs from the method of playing the driver. In the first place, the hall lies low; it does not, as in a tee shot, hold out promise of great possibilities, but seems rather to on the part of the player.
