CREDIT MEN WILL MEET TONIGHT.—A meeting of the Portland Credit Men's association that will be of general interest to many who are not members of the organization will be held at the Benson hotel at 6 o'clock this evening, when a dinner will be enjoyed in the Trovian room. O'Brien Atkinson, an expert on credits by reason of long service with R. G. Dun & Co., will be the principal speaker on September 24 for postmaster at St. Helens at an annual salary of $1700. Those who seek the position must be at least 21 years old and have written the delivery district of the St. Helens office.

From the United States department of agriculture, bureau of animal industry, dairy division, suggestions have been issued asking housewives to be especially careful in handling milk for the household during the summer. These suggestions, adapted by the Oregon Dairy council into the following "Ten Commandments for Milk Consumers" should be set out and posted on a board and hung up in every kitchen.

Here are the "Ten Commandments": "Buy the best milk obtainable. It is the cheapest in the long run.

Chats With Home Gardeners

DEAR FRIENDS—The most important subjects before us for consideration today are our late fall and winter gardens. It may seem a long time until winter and rather early to plan for the food we shall need at that time, but it is not early, it is as late now as we can profitably plant some of the vegetables. Late fall and winter gardens should be planted later as set out.

Our housewives are busy as bees at this time bottling their cans full of fruit and vegetables for winter use. They do well, especially well this year, for no one can foresee the price of the vegetables. Late fall and winter, as more and more of them are exported and the general trend of prices continues upward.

The Advantage of Our Climate. We do not see much about winter gardens in papers and magazines, but in addition to the fact that our country does not have a climate which makes them possible—they have such cold weather in winter that all vegetables left in the ground freeze, it is only here in the west, Oregon and Washington, where the warm Japan current in the Pacific ocean tempers our climate, that we have the winter climate that makes it possible to grow many of the vegetables of the United States, and can leave potatoes, carrots, beets and other root crops right in the ground until we wish to use them.

Preparing for the Winter Garden. As soon as any early crop is harvested and out of the way not a day should be lost in replanting the idle land. Clear away the pea vines as soon as the bulk of the crop has been harvested, and radish, lettuce and spinach ground is now vacant. Every effort should be made to keep the land continually busy by planting and replanting until fall, and so get another crop in.

Short Season Crops to Plant Now. Among the tender short-season crops which may be planted now, okra and spinach are two longer-season vegetables of a tropical nature which do best in the summer. They are easy to grow and can be sown in succession. For use in winter and early spring seed should be sown in September and October and New Zealand are good varieties.

Peas do not usually do well in hot weather, but if you have a part of the garden in a cool place, you can get an afternoon sun and plenty of water to use, you can raise peas or anything else all summer here by intelligent care and cultivation.

Plants of the following cole crops may be set out at this time in permanent beds for next winter's use: 1, Brussels sprouts; 2, broccoli (winter cauliflower); 3, late cabbage; 4, late cauliflower; 5, late kale.
